(1) See Firth and Gunn, "The Teti Pyramid Cemeteries", Vol. I, p. 89; also W.B.S., Vol. III, p. 202, but according to an interesting article by GRENZLOFF in which he discusses the education of the royal family during the Old Kingdom, the word hts means "to educate", and not "ornament". Thus, the title should be translated "Great Educatress", and applies to the Queen in her capacity of educatress of the royal princesses. See GRENZLOFF, "A.S.", Vol. XLII, p. 112, ff.

Mastaba of Queen Rekhit-Ra'
No. 1
Mastaba of Queen Rekhit-Ra'
THE MASTABA OF QUEEN RHÍ-T-R’

SITUATION

This mastaba is situated to the south of the Causeway of the Second Pyramid, and to the east of the Mastaba of In-ki-j the Priest (see General Plan 7, 8-Q).

DESCRIPTION

The Mastaba of Queen RHÍ-T-R’ is of a considerable size, and its superstructure is built of large blocks of local limestone masonry, the upper courses of which are destroyed. It is approached by way of a long, rock-cut passage running parallel with the causeway of the Second Pyramid (that is to say east to west) and at a distance of 8:00 m. from this causeway. The passage, which measures 53:60 X 1:40 m., ends in a rectangular courtyard, measuring 6:35 X 2:40 m., the lower parts of the walls being cut in the natural rock.

The main entrance to the tomb is situated in the western corner of the southern wall of the courtyard, and measures 1:20 X 1:50 m. It gives access to a passage measuring 5:70 X 2:20 m., in the southern wall of which is another doorway (1:00 X 0:95 m.) leading to a small ante-chamber.

This doorway was of a single-leaf type, and its upper socket is still in position.

The walls of the corridor and the ante-chamber are partly cut out of the solid rock, and completed in the upper parts by some courses of limestone masonry. The floor of both the corridor and the ante-chamber slopes slightly inwards.

THE ANTE-CHAMBER

The ante-chamber measures 3:50 X 2:00 m. Near the southern end of its western wall is a doorway measuring 1:10 X 1:45 m. cut in the solid rock, and cased with white limestone.

The drum of this entrance is of white limestone, and is incised with a horizontal row of finely-cut hieroglyphs, reading (Fig. 3, Pl. IA):

“She Who Sees Horus and Set (the King), the King’s Daughter. Great Educatress,
King’s Wife, RHÍ-T-R’.”

A few traces of blue paint show that the signs were once coloured.

The other parts of the doorway are uninscribed.

THE CHAPEL

Originally the mastaba was intended to contain only one large rock-cut chapel, having a roof supported by three square pillars and a pier, also cut in the natural rock. But later, modifications were made to the plan, most probably to correspond with the mortuary cult of the period. The northern half of the eastern part of the chapel was partitioned off by a screen wall of limestone masonry, the base of which is still in position, just to the right-hand side of the entrance. The spaces between the pillars were also filled with limestone masonry, the lower courses of which are still preserved.
When the limestone debris which filled the chapel was removed, a pavement was revealed measuring 1.50 m. deep. This pavement was composed of a thick layer of debris, coated with mud, and it had been displaced by plunderers in their attempts to enter the burial-chamber.

The ceiling of the chapel is very finely dressed.

The Northern Wall

Situated along the base of the northern wall is a platform or bench, measuring 2.75 m. long by 0.90 m. high. It is formed of two large slabs of white limestone and one course of local limestone which in its turn rests upon a bed of rubble.

The Southern Wall

In the eastern end of the southern wall is an unfinished niche, measuring 0.90 × 1.00 × 1.25 m. perhaps intended to contain a statue of the deceased.

The Western Wall

The northern end of the western wall is occupied by a large recess, measuring 1.00 × 2.25 × 2.25 m. high. The western (rear) wall of this niche is occupied by two rock-cut false-doors, the southern one of which is uninscribed.

The Northern False-Door (Fig. 4)

The upper part of the northern false-door is destroyed. The panel is much eroded, but on its lower part the remains of a figure of Queen Rūt-R' are still visible. The figure is sculptured in low relief, and depicts the lady seated upon a chair, her left hand resting upon her thigh, and the right one apparently placed upon her breast.

The lower lintel is inscribed in low relief with a horizontal row of hieroglyphs, some of which are effaced. The remaining signs read: $\text{King's Daughter of (His Body), } Rūt-R'$. The rest of the false-door is uninscribed.

The floor of the recess is paved with two large slabs of limestone in which are hollowed two circular depressions. There was probably a circular offering-table set in each of these depressions.
THE MASTABA OF QUEEN RHÌT-R'

Cut in the northern part of the floor of the chapel is a sloping passage which leads down to the burial-chamber. The passage was originally made wide enough to allow for the introduction of the sarcophagus, after which it was filled in with masonry, leaving enough space open along the eastern side to permit the body to be brought into the burial-chamber on the day of interment. After the funeral ceremonies were completed, the passage was finally closed by means of five large blocks of limestone, placed one behind the other. These plug-stones were found in position, but the plunderers had obtained access to the burial-chamber by removing the upper course of the filling masonry.

THE BURIAL-CHAMBER

The burial-chamber is entirely cut in the rock, and measures 4'00 × 3'95 m. The walls are finely dressed. It contains a large, uninscribed sarcophagus of white limestone, directed to the north-east. Behind the sarcophagus is a kind of shelf, built of small blocks of limestone. The lid of the sarcophagus, which is provided with two handles at each of its extremities, was found slightly removed from its original place.

Nothing was found inside the sarcophagus but the leg bones of a bull were found lying upon the lid. Thrown on the debris to the south-west of the sarcophagus were a few human bones and part of a human skull, perhaps the remains of Queen Rhìt-R'.

In the base of the southern wall a recess had been cut to house the canopic jars, which had, however, disappeared.

The Contents of the Burial-Chamber

After clearing out the debris from the burial-chamber the following objects were recovered:

2. A model jar of alabaster. Height: 5'0 cm. Dr. Reisner ("Myerinus", Fig. 68, No. 83) identifies this type as a vessel to contain oil or milk (1) (Pl. II, D).
4. A model vase of alabaster (Pl. II, F). Height: 11'0 cm. This is the traditional perfume or oil jar, the form of which frequently appears as a common determinative in the writing of the names of the seven holy oils (2).
6. A fragment of alabaster bearing an incised figure of a woman seated upon a chair. Above her head was an inscription, of which only the sign ע and a small part of the sign remained. Perhaps it was the name of Queen Rhìt-R' and the seated figure was the determinative (Pl. I, B, E).

EXCAVATIONS AT GIZA, 1934-1935

Objects found in the Debris of the Forecourt:—

(1) A dish of fine white limestone. Diameter: 10.7 cm. (Pl. II. C).

(2) The lower part of a canopic jar of white limestone.

(3) A cup of fine pottery, well-made and finely polished. It has curved sides and a flat base.

(4) A fragment of a canopic jar of white limestone (Pl. II. A).

Objects found in the Chapel:—

(1) A fragment of a canopic jar of alabaster.

(2) A flat fragment of diorite, finely polished, and having a curved rim. It bears traces of an incised inscription, and may have formed part of one of the offering-tables which were originally fitted into the circular depressions at the foot of the false-doors (Pl. II. G).

(3) A fragment of a statuette of white limestone. It forms part of the left shoulder of a woman having the left arm extended forward. It is painted dark yellow and has a line of black around the neck, which may be intended for necklace, or the lower edge of the hair. It was found in the debris filling the sloping passage (Pl. II, B).

This tomb is very important for two reasons. First, it furnishes us with a new name and a glimpse of the personality of yet another member of the royal family of the Pyramid Builders. Secondly, if she is literally the daughter of King Khafra, and not his descendant (1), this is one of the few tombs which can be precisely dated (2). There is no doubt about the high lineage of Queen Rhi.t-R. In her own tomb she bears the title "King's Daughter of (His Body), and in the tomb of her priest Ki-m-nfr.t she is referred to as the Daughter of Khafra; while in both tombs she holds the title of King's Wife, which means that she was a real queen and not a mere concubine. It is unfortunate that we do not know the name of her royal husband.

(1) It sometimes happens that Egyptians of the royal family refer to a certain king as their "father" when in reality he is their ancestor in the direct line of descent.

Situation

The Mastaba of Irj-u-ih.t lies to the south-east of that of Queen Rhi.t-R', and occupies the space immediately in front of the doorway of the Mastaba of Km-nfr.t. Probably Irj-u-ih.t was related to Km-nfr.t, as the arrangement of the mastabas necessitated that the chapel of the former should be used as a right of way by persons visiting the chapel of the latter, an arrangement likely to prove very inconvenient if the owners of the two tombs were strangers to each other (see General Plan 9-Q).

Description

This mastaba is built of medium-sized blocks of local limestone. Its entrance opens south; the lintel (Fig. 6, Pl. III. A) was found fallen in front of the doorway, but has now been restored to its original position. It is sculptured with six representations of the deceased, each of which represents him in a walking attitude, holding a long staff in one hand and the hpr-baton in the Three of these figures face east and three face west. They are all wearing curled wigs, and short kilts with triangular aprons. Above these figures and running the whole length of the lintel is a horizontal row of hieroglyphs, reading:

“...A boon which the King gives, [and ] a boon which Anubis, who is upon His Mountain, Imj-w-t, the Lord of the Holy Land, who presides over the God’s Dwelling [gives], that offerings may come forth to him, of bread and beer in the Wny Feast, the Feast of Thoth, and at every good feast, [to] the Overseer of the Commissions of the Service of the Divine Offerings in the Two Houses, Ijr.”

In front of the first figure of the deceased to the right-hand side is inscribed: “The Inspector of the Priests of the Pyramid (Mn-kw-R is divine, Ijr-n-ht)”.

In front of the third figure is inscribed: “The Overseer of the Commissions, Royal Director, the Director of the Book-keepers, Ijr-n-ht”.

Another inscription appears behind this last figure and reads: “The Judge, and Overseer of the Scribes, the Secretary of the Judgment, Ijr-n-ht”.

In front of the second figure is inscribed: “The Overseer of the Commission of the Divine Offerings of the Two Houses, Ijr-n-Pth”.

The inscription in front of the third figure reads: “The Judge, and Overseer of the Scribes, the Royal Director, the Director of the Book-keepers, Ijr”.

The Drum (Fig. 7, Pl. III, D):

The drum of the entrance was found in the filling of Shaft No. 5084, and bears a horizontal row of hieroglyphs, reading: “The Royal Director, the Judge, and Nome Administrator, the Director of the Book-keepers, Ijr-n-Pth.

This doorway gives access to a small chapel measuring 1.50 × 3.40 m., the northern wall of which is formed by the façade of the Mastaba of Ki-m-nfr.t.

The western wall is wholly occupied by a large false door, fashioned from a monolithic block of white limestone.
The False-Door (Figs. 8, 9, Pl. III, C, D)

It is surmounted by a cavetto cornice, the two ends of which are somewhat damaged. It is inscribed as follows:—

The Upper Lintel ‘A’.—It bears a horizontal row of hieroglyphs, reading: “A boon which the King gives and a boon which Anubis, who is upon his Mountain [gives], that offerings of bread, cake, and beer, come forth to him in his tomb in the necropolis”.

The Panel ‘B’.—The deceased is represented seated upon a chair, his right hand outstretched to an offering-table. On the right side of which is an array of different kinds of food and drink offerings. Below the table are a ewer and a basin, and two ‘hu’ vases, resting upon low stands.

At the top of the panel, a horizontal row of hieroglyphs reads: “The Royal Director, the Overseer of the Commission of the Service of the Divine Offerings in the Two Houses, Irj”.

The Lower Lintel ‘C’.—It bears a horizontal row of hieroglyphs, reading: “The Honoured by Osiris, Irj-n-ḥt”.

The Right Outer Jamb D.D.—It bears two vertical rows of hieroglyphs, reading: “A boon which the king gives, that offerings of bread, cake, and beer may come forth to him in the Opening Day of the Year Feast, the Feast of Thoth, the First of the Year Feast, the Wḥy Feast, the Feast of Skr, the Feast of Burning, in the Sḥḥī Feast, the Feast of the Epiphany of Min, in the Monthly Feast, and the Half-Monthly Feast, the Feasts of the Beginning of the Year, in every good feast and every day . . .”.

At the bottom of this jamb is a horizontal inscription, reading: “The Scribe of the King’s Documents, Irj-n-ḥt”.

Below this is a figure of the deceased, represented in a walking attitude, with a long staff in one hand and the Kherep baton in the other.
The Left Outer Jamb, E.E.—This also bears a double row of vertical inscription which reads:

“A boon which the King gives, and a boon which Anubis, who presides over the God's Dwelling, Imi-set, the Lord of the Holy Land, gives; a burial to him in the western desert, in his tomb in the necropolis [after] a good old age, that he may walk upon the holy ways of the west as one who is honoured by Ptah, the Scribe of the King's Documents . . .”.

At the bottom of the inscription is a representation of the deceased, in the same attitude as the one on the left outer jamb. Above his head is inscribed: “Irj-n-14b”.

The Right Inner Jamb, F.F.—It bears two vertical rows of hieroglyphs, reading: “The Assistant Priest of the Pyramid called Khafra is Great, the Secretary of the Divine Treasury (?), the Inspector of the Priests of the Pyramid called 'Men-haw-Ra' is Divine', the Royal Director, the overseer of the Service of the Commission of the Divine Offerings”.

At the bottom of the jamb is a figure of the deceased, and above his head is inscribed horizontally: “The Judge, and Inspector of the Bookkeepers, Irj-n-Pth”.

The Left Inner Jamb, G.G.—It bears two vertical rows of hieroglyphs, which read: “The Overseer of the Commissions of the Service of the Divine Offerings in the Two Houses, the Royal Director, the Honoured by Ptah, the Judge and Nome Administrator, He who is in Front of the Throne, the Judge, and Assistant of the Bookkeepers, the Honoured by Anubis who is upon His Mountain”.

At the end is another representation of the deceased, with his name, Irj, inscribed horizontally above his head.
The Southern Wall (Fig. 10, Pl. IV., A, B)

The upper courses of the wall are destroyed, but at the lower right-hand side is a large representation of the deceased, the upper part of which we were fortunate enough to recover from the filling of his shaft. Irj-n-ih.t is represented in a standing position, leaning upon a long staff.

He wears a short wig (or perhaps his natural hair?), a wide necklace, a short kilt, and a pair of sandals. Above his head are the lower parts of four vertical rows of hieroglyphs which read:

1. "(The Overseer of the Service of the) Commission of the Divine Offerings."
2. "(He who is) in Front of the (Throne): Irj."
3. "The Secretary of the Judgment."
4. "(The Honoured by) Anubis: Irj-n-ih.t."

In front of him is the lower part of a vertical row of hieroglyphs, the remaining signs of which read: "... in his chapel."

In front of this is another large figure of the owner of the tomb, this time represented seated upon a chair, and stretching forth one hand towards an offering-table which is set before him. In front of his leg is the lower part of a vertical inscription, of which only the signs remain. Under the offering-table are a ewer and a basin, and three "hs" vases placed upon a low stand. Beyond this are two superposed registers, the upper one of which is badly damaged, but appeared to have been devoted to representations of offering-tables and offerings. The lower register is well preserved, and bears a representation of four male offering-bearers. The first, second, and fourth men are carrying legs of beef; while the third man carries a live duck in each hand. According to the inscriptions incised in front of them, the first two men were each named, Sšm-nfr; the figure of the third man is uninscribed, and the fourth man was named Th-țj.

The Northern Wall (Fig. 11, Pl. V, A)

On the left-hand side of this wall is a representation of the deceased seated upon a chair before an offering-table, to which he extends his right hand. The upper part of his figure is destroyed. Behind him, and represented on a much smaller scale, is the figure of a woman. She is crouching upon the ground, and smelling a lotus-flower, which she holds in her left hand. Two more women are represented in a similar attitude under the chair; these are probably the daughters of Irij-n-�t, and each originally had her name inscribed above her head, but these inscriptions are now nearly all obliterated.

Kneeling at the feet of the deceased is a little girl, her right hand resting upon his left foot. She wears her hair in a long "pig-tail", and holds a lotus-flower in her left hand; in front of her is inscribed: "His daughter, Nb.t".

Underneath the offering-table are a ewer and a basin, and three "hs" vases on a stand; while to the right are two superposed registers representing various kinds of food and drink offerings.

Below this scene is a narrow register in which is depicted a procession of male offering-bearers, headed by a vertical inscription of which remains only: "Presenting the choicest . . . .".

The first man in the procession carries a leg of beef, and above him is inscribed: "His beloved eldest son, Sšm".

In front of him is also inscribed his name: "Sšm".

The second figure carries a live goose, the neck of which he is about to wring. The third man carries a laden tray upon his right hand and shoulder, and balances a sealed jar upon his left hand; above his head is inscribed his name: \( \Box \) \( \text{Bš}".
The fourth man carries a basket of bread, and a bouquet of long-stalked lotus-flowers and buds. Above him is inscribed: “His son, Irj”.

The fifth man carries a covered basket, and a laden tray, and is also named Irj. The sixth man carries a live duck and a laden tray, and is uninscribed. The seventh man is also nameless. He wears his hair in a “pig-tail” and carries two baskets.

Shafts

Shaft No. 1379 (Fig. 12)

Grave-pit: 0.97 x 1.55 x 0.87 m.; partly built of local limestone, and partly rock-hewn; filling of limestone debris and blocks of stone, some of which bore scenes and inscriptions carved upon them (Pl. IV, C, Pl. V, B; C, D); side-chamber on the west, aperture open; partly filled with blocks of stone and limestone debris; a sarcophagus is sunk in the middle of the floor, its monolithic lid is slightly displaced; a shelf is recessed in the western wall.

SITUATION

The Mastaba of Ki-m-nfr.t lies to the south-east of that of Queen Rḥt-R; and access to it is only to be gained through the Chapel of Irj-nhyp (2) (see General Plan 8-Q).

DESCRIPTION

This mastaba is entirely built of medium-sized blocks of local limestone. The entrance, measuring 0:50 m. wide, is provided with two jambs formed of monolithic slabs of white Turah limestone, the upper parts of which are damaged.

5 Metres
The Right Thickness (Fig. 14, Pl. VI, B)

The principal feature of the sculptures on this thickness is a scene representing Ki-m-nfr.t burning incense before his mistress, Queen Rhi.t-R' (1). The Queen is depicted in a standing attitude, and is clad in a long, close fitting garment. She wears a "dog-collar" necklace, a wide bracelet on her right wrist, and anklets. She is smelling a large, long-stalked lotus-flower which she holds in her left hand. Above her head are traces of two horizontal rows of hieroglyphs, the remains of which read: ... King's Wife, Great Educatrix Rhi.t-R'.

In front of the Queen is a representation of Ki-m-nfr.t who is depicted upon a much smaller scale, out of respect to his mistress. He wears a curled wig and is clad in a short kilt worn back to front. He holds a censer in both hands. Above his head are two rows of hieroglyphs, reading:

(1) “The Overseer of the Ka-servants of the Endowment”.
(2) “Ki-m-nfr.t”.

In front of him are two more horizontal rows of hieroglyphs, reading:

(1) “The President of the Shipyard”.
(2) “Ki-m-nfr.t”.

Below this scene is a narrow register containing the figures of four Ki-servants, each of whom has his title and name inscribed above his head. The first man is named Pth-srj, and carries a ewer and a basin. The second man carries a live goose, and is named lhj. The third man, ljt, is named. The fourth man, who is called Pth-wr, also carries a live goose. Like Ki-m-nfr.t, these four men are all depicted as wearing their kilts back to front.

(1) See p. 1, ff, of the present volume.
The Left Thickness (Fig. 15, Pl. VI. A)

The scenes and inscriptions on this thickness are identical with those upon the right-hand thickness, but the horizontal inscription above the head of the Queen is in a much better state of preservation, and reads:

1. “Hr-nsr-ib [Hfr.f-R’]."

2. “His Daughter, She Who Sees Horus and Set”.

3. “King’s Wife, Great Educatress, Great Favourite, Rhi.t-R’”.

The figures and inscriptions on these two jambs are beautifully carved in high relief, and show great skill in execution.

This doorway gives access to a corridor-chapel, measuring 8.30 m. long by 1.0 m. wide, in the western wall, of which are situated two false-doors.

The Southern False-Door (Fig. 16, Pl. VII)

It is formed of a monolithic slab of white Turah limestone, and the upper lintel is now lacking.

The Panel

This panel bears a scene representing a man and a woman, most probably Ks-m-nfr.t and his wife, seated facing each other across an offering-table.

The Drum

It bears the name of Ks-m-nfr.t, inscribed in relief; and all the remaining parts of the false-door are entirely covered by items of an offering-list, which are treated in detail in Part II of this work (see p. 116, Pls. IX–XVI).
The Northern False-Door (Fig. 17, Pl. VIII)

This false-door, which is smaller than the preceding one, is roughly carved from local limestone.

The Upper Lintel

The top, and right-hand side is almost entirely effaced but the left-hand side bears traces of a horizontal row of hieroglyphs, reading:  "... every feast and every day, the Ka-servant [Śps-] Škr".

The Panel

It bears a scene representing the deceased seated before a laden offering-table, above which is inscribed:  "Śps-Śkr".

The remaining parts of this false-door are so badly eroded, that it is impossible to determine if they were ever inscribed or not.

At the northern end of the eastern wall of this corridor-chapel is the squint of a serdab, which lies behind it, and in which was found the pedestal and feet of a limestone statuette of a man, in a walking attitude (Pl. XV, A).
The Chapel of Ki-kaj·nh

Titles of Ki-kaj·nh

1. \(\text{rḫ niswt} \) "King’s Relative”.
2. \(\text{smsw wbr.t} \) “The President of the Shipyard or Dockyard (?)” var. \(\text{smsw wbr.t} \) (W.B., I, p. 355).
3. \(\text{imkhw} \) “The Honoured One”.

The Chapel of Ki-kaj·nh is situated at the northern end of the corridor-chapel of Ki-m-nfr.t, an arrangement which suggests that Irj-n-ḥ.t, Ki-m-nfr.t, and Ki-kaj·nh were all members of one family. This chapel measures 2.50 m. × 1.30 m.; its upper courses of masonry are destroyed.

The False-Door (Fig. 18, Pl. IX, B)

The false-door occupies almost the entire surface of the western wall. It has a torus moulding running down the sides, but the upper lintel, and presumably the cavetto cornice are lacking.
The Panel

The scene depicted on the panel represents a man and a woman seated facing each other, a table of offerings being set between them. Above this table are represented two ewers and basins, a trussed goose, and a haunch of beef.

The Lower Lintel

It bears a horizontal row of hieroglyphs, reading:

The Right Outer Jamb

It bears a vertical row of hieroglyphs, reading:

“A boon which the King gives, and a boon which Anubis, who is upon His Mountain, the Lord of the Holy Land (gives), a burial in the Necropolis after a good old age. [to] Ki-k3j-’nh’.

This also bears a vertical inscription reading:

The Inner Jambs

“The King’s Relative, the President of the Shipyard (?), Ki-k3j-’nh’.

At the bottom of each of these inner jambs is a representation of the deceased, in both cases depicted in a walking attitude. He wears a short wig, and a short kilt with a triangular apron. On the right-hand jamb, he carries a long staff in his right hand, while the left arm hangs at his side; but on the left-hand jamb, the right arm hangs by his side, and the left one is bent, with the hand closed and resting upon his chest. The workmanship of these two figures is forceful and life-like, especially the heads, which appear to be individual portraits of the deceased.

The Serdab

The serdab, as mentioned above, lies behind the northern end of the eastern wall of the corridor-chapel of Ki-m-nfr.t. It measures 2.25 × 0.70 m., and the upper courses of its northern wall are destroyed. The contents, which will be described hereinafter, were found thrown aside in the Chapel of Ki-k3j-’nh.”
The Inscribed Slabs

(1) A slab of white limestone: in a very bad state of preservation. It is inscribed with large, well-cut hieroglyphs, reading (Fig. 19, Pl. IX, A):

\[ \text{"The King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Khafra', His Eldest Daughter..."} \]

Perhaps this refers to Queen Rḥḥ.t-R'. It was found a little to the east of the Chapel of ḫḥ.t.

(2) A slab of white limestone which formed the left-hand side of a lintel of either the doorway or the false-door of ḫ-nfr.t. It is inscribed with two horizontal rows of hieroglyphs, reading:

\[ \text{"... the Overseer of the Ka-servants of the Endowment. ḫ-nfr.t"} \]

At the end of the inscription is a representation of the deceased, in a walking attitude. He wears a short wig, a false beard and a short kilt. Found in the filling of a shaft (Pl. III, B).

(3) A large slab of local limestone, badly eroded (Fig. 20, Pl. IX, C). It apparently belonged to the Chapel of ḫ-ḫnḥ, and is inscribed:

\[ \text{"The King's Relative, the Overseer of the Ka-servants... (the President) of the Shipyard (?), the Honoured by the Great God..."} \]

It was found a little to the east of the serdāb.
The Statuette

Statuette No. 1 of a Scribe (Pl. XIV A, B, C):—

Material.—White limestone, painted.

Dimensions.—Height: 19.0 cm. Breadth across shoulders: 0.5 cm.

Preservation.—Found broken clean in half at the waist but has been repaired, otherwise preservation is extremely good.

Workmanship.—Excellent in every respect. The face is vividly alive, and great care has been expended on the anatomical details of the limbs and body. Clearly the work of a skilled artist who took both pride and pleasure in the execution of his task.

Subject.—The statuette represents a scribe seated cross-legged upon the ground. An open roll of papyrus is spread across his lap, its ends being carefully held in his hands. The whole attitude and expression of the figure suggests that the man was reading from the papyrus, and has just glanced up with a smile of welcome for the beholder. He wears a long wig, brushed back to reveal his ears, and is clad in a short kilt. His face is round, and bears a pleasant and intelligent expression. His chest and shoulders are broad and muscular, and his whole figure more upright and athletic than one would expect to find in a man of his profession.

Colours.—Flesh, reddish-brown; kilt white; traces of black on wig, eyes, eyebrows and pedestal.

Statuette No. 2 (Pls. X A, B, C, XI A, B, C, D, E)

This statuette provides an example of the vandalism and wanton destruction prevalent throughout all Egypt at the close of Old Kingdom. The head was found in front of the false-door of Ky-kty-hb, while the legs and pedestal were found in the serdab; but the body to which they belonged had been previously brought to light is the Fifth Season, having been recovered from a neighbouring shaft. These three fragments have now been united, and the restored statuette bears scarcely any traces of the vicissitudes through which it has passed.

Material.—Limestone painted.

Preservation.—As mentioned before, the statuette was found broken into three pieces, each of which, however, was in a good state of preservation.

Workmanship.—Judged by the head alone, the technique of this figure is excellent; the sculptor has successfully conveyed through the medium of the handsome features and pleasant expression, the suggestion that his sitter was a young man possessed of a charming personality. The remainder of the figure is however somewhat thick-set and clumsy, while the feet appear to be too short and wide. Yet the care taken with each detail, and the knowledge of anatomy displayed in the treatment of the muscles, together with the suggestion of softness in the fleshy parts of the plump body, offers the excuse for the somewhat clumsy appearance of the figure, in that the defect lay in the individual characteristics of the sitter, rather than in the lack of skill of the sculptor.

Subject.—It represents a young man in a walking attitude, the left leg advanced, and the arms hanging by the sides, with the hands closed upon the unknown object. He wears a curled wig, and is clad in a short kilt with a triangular apron.

Statuette No. 3 (Pls. XII, A, B; XIII)

Material.—White limestone.

Preservation.—Almost perfect.

Workmanship.—Decidedly inferior to the two preceding examples. The head is carefully executed, and the rather plain features, clearly a portrait; but the remainder of the figure is out of all proportion to nature.

Subject.—It represents an old man in a walking attitude. The left leg is advanced and the arms hang by the sides with the hands closed upon the unknown object. He wears a short, curled wig, and a short kilt with a pleated side-wrap.

The following fragments of statuettes were also recovered:

(1) The lower half of a statuette of a man (Pl. XVI, A, B) of white limestone. He was represented seated upon a stool, and was clad in a short kilt.

(2) The legs of the statuette of a man (Pl. XV, D). He was represented in a walking attitude with the left foot advanced. The knees and toes are exceptionally well modelled and suggest that the standard of the work was rather above the average.

(3) The feet of a statuette, apparently of a woman (Pl. XV, B). It is of white limestone.

(4) The pedestal and fragment of a statuette of a woman engaged in baking bread (Pl. XV, C). (Found in the serdab.)

Shaft No. 1289 (Fig. 21)

Grave-pit: 1·17 × 0·95 × 2·22 m.; partly built of limestone and partly rock-hewn; filling of limestone debris; side-chamber opening east; aperture open; filling of debris; sarcophagus cut in the floor in the middle of the chamber.

Burial: A damaged skeleton.
Shaft No. 1290 (Fig. 22)

Grave-pit: 0.90 x 0.70 x 2.82 m.; partly built of rubble and partly rock-hewn; filling of debris, side-chamber on the east; aperture open; nothing found.

Shaft No. 1291 (Fig. 23)

Grave-pit: 1.15 x 0.95 x 3.50 m.; partly built of limestone and partly rock-hewn; filling of limestone debris; side-chamber on the south; aperture closed with one slab of limestone; filling of sand and debris; breach in the southern wall opening into Shaft No. 1290; sarcophagus hewn in the rock along the southern wall, provided with a monolithic cover having two handles on each side; cover found slightly removed from its place.

Shaft No. 1397 (Fig. 24)

Grave-pit: 0.70 x 0.90 x 2.38 m.; partly built of rubble, partly rock-hewn; side-chamber on east; nothing found.

THE ROCK-CUT TOMB OF PRINCE IWN-R'

SITUATION

This tomb, which is wholly cut in the rock, lies to the north-west of that of Princess Hm.t-R', and south-west of the subway cut under the Causeway of King Khafra' (see General Plan 7-M.-N).

DESCRIPTION

This tomb lies at the extreme western end of a sloping passage, measuring 1·50 x 1·65 m., which is cut in the solid rock, and terminates in a small rectangular courtyard, measuring 4·00 x 2·65 m.

In the north-east corner of this courtyard is a niche, measuring 0·88 x 0·35 m., and containing a life-sized rock-cut statue of a man. This statue measures 1·55 m. high by 0·50 m. across the shoulders, with the exception of the face, is fairly well-preserved. It represents a man of a commanding mien, in a walking attitude, the left leg advanced, and the arms at the sides, with the hand clenched. He wears a long wig, brushed back, and a kilt with a triangular apron (Pl. XVII, A).

South of this niche the rock wall has been cut back, forming a recess 1·45 x 0·62 m., in the eastern wall of which is cut another niche, measuring 0·65 x 0·30 m., and containing another life-sized rock-hewn statue. The front of this recess was blocked with limestone masonry, and thus formed a serdab for the above-mentioned statue. Owing to being thus enclosed and sheltered this statue is in a very good state of preservation, with the exception of the head, which had apparently suffered wilful mutilation. It represents a finely developed man in a walking attitude, with the left leg advanced, and the arms at the sides. He is clad in a short kilt with a pleated side-wrap. The workmanship of this figure is excellent, especially in the modelling of the torso with its wide, powerful shoulders, and prominent, well-developed chest. Notice should also be taken of the virile grace of the narrow waist and hips, and the long, sweeping curve of the advanced thigh. Nor have the legs and arms escaped the sculptor's attention, and the renderings of the muscles, and the underlying bony structure of the joints are admirable. This statue measures 1·45 m. high, and 0·50 m. across the shoulders (Pl. XVIII).

In the south-eastern corner of this courtyard is the opening of Shaft No. 1453.

The Entrance

The entrance of this tomb opens eastwards, and measures 1·00 x 1·30 m. It has a rebate running around its inner side.

The Lintel (Fig. 26)

The lintel is also cut in the rock, and its surface is almost entirely eroded, with the exception of a few signs.
The Drum (Fig. 26, Pl. XVII, B)

The drum bears one horizontal, and nine vertical rows of incised hieroglyphs, reading:

"The King of Upper and Lower Egypt, H'j.f-R' (Khafra'), His Eldest Son of His Body (!). Chief Ritualist of His Father, Scribe of the God's Book of His Father, Sole Confidant of His Father, Director of the Palace, Guardian of the Secrets of the House of the Morning, Priest of the Souls of Nekhen . . . ", High Priest, Overseer of All the Works, the Honoured by His Father, Secretary of His Father, He Who is in [the Heart] of His Father, Iwn-R'."

This doorway gives access to a large chapel, measuring 7·15 × 3·95 m. On account of the unfinished condition of the walls, one may safely conjecture that Iwn-R' died before the completion of his tomb.

In the western wall are carved two uninscribed false-doors, the upper part of the northern one being covered with a layer of reddish plaster.

Immediately to the right of the northern false-door, a part of the western wall is left protruding in an unfinished state. Near the north-western corner is the opening of Shaft No. 1381, at the top of the western side of which is an aperture leading to a spacious burial-chamber.

It was found partly closed with small slabs of limestone.

The floor of this burial-chamber was entirely occupied by a great number of skeletons extended on their backs, with heads to the west. No funerary equipment was found buried with these bodies.

Grave-pit: 0·90 × 0·90 × 0·25, unfinished, filling of limestone debris.

SITUATION

This tomb is situated to the south of that of Princess Hmjt-R, and on the west of that of Shn-kfj (see General Plan 8, 9-N).

DESCRIPTION

The tomb is entirely hewn in the solid rock. The entrance is reached by means of a sloping passage, also cut in the rock, and measuring 4-70 × 0-70 m. In the eastern end of the southern wall of this passage is a small recess, measuring 1-50 × 1-20 × 0-85 m. high, and having a crudely cut drum at its entrance. The floor of this recess is wholly occupied by a later shaft. A little to the west of this recess is cut a chamber, measuring 2-2 × 2-0 × 1-95 m. high, the roof being supported by a single square pillar. The floor is about 0-40 m. higher than that of the passage. In the eastern end of southern wall of this chamber is an unfinished niche, apparently intended to contain a rock-cut statue. Another statue was commenced in the wall immediately to the west of this niche, but was left unfinished.

The space between the pillar and the southern wall was filled in with limestone masonry and mortar, and thus the chamber was divided into two small cells, which were re-employed as later burials.

In the northern wall of the passage, beside the main entrance to the tomb, is an unfinished recess containing traces of the first rough blocking out of a rock-cut statue.

(1) According to Gardiner ("Oenomacita", I, pp. 22-28) the hrj-hbj's chief qualification was a knowledge of ritualistic use. The hrj-hbj were often priests, but not always so, and their magical powers were often used for non-religious ends.

Fig. 29
The Entrance

The main entrance of the tomb is situated at the extreme western end of the above-mentioned passage; it opens east, and measures 1-20 m. wide. The lintel is uninscribed.

The Drum (Fig. 30)

The drum is inscribed in relief with two horizontal rows of beautifully-cut hieroglyphs, reading:

(1) "The Hereditary Prince, the King's Eldest Son of His Body, the Chief Ritualist of His Father."

(2) "Chief Judge, Vizier, Count, Treasurer of His Father, the King of Lower Egypt."

At the end the name of the owner of the tomb: "'nh-m'-R'" is inscribed vertically.

The doorway was found filled with wind-blown sand, in which there was a limestone group representing a man and a woman.

This entrance gives access to a rock-cut chapel, divided into two unequal parts (marked 'A' and 'B', on the plan) by means of two square pillars and a pier. 'A' measures 3'00 × 8'80 m. The ceiling is finely dressed, and retains faint traces of having been coloured red. Horizontal and vertical lines traced on the walls in red paint are the guide lines for the stone-cutters.

In the north-eastern corner of the floor is a stone basin, measuring 0'93 × 0'70 × 0'30 m. deep, and having its outside rim elevated 0'17 m. from the floor level. That it was originally provided with a roof situated at a height of 0'65 m. from the bottom can be proved by the fragment still in situ.
In the top of the northern end of the east wall is a sloping aperture, measuring \(0.75 \times 0.80 \times 2.40\) m. cut through the rock to admit light into the inner chapel, the doorway of which lies opposite to this aperture.

The Inner Chapel

The entrance to the inner chapel measures \(0.70 \times 1.90\) m. high, and is cut in the south side of a recess (2.20 m. wide) in the northern end of the western wall. The inner chapel itself measures \(2.20 \times 2.00\) m., and its ceiling is a little lower than that of the outer chapel.

In the western wall are carved two uninscribed false-doors, at the base of which is a platform, measuring \(2.25 \times 0.20\) m. cut in the rock of the floor. All the walls of this inner chapel are beautifully cut and dressed.

Returning again to the outer chapel, it will be noticed that the space between the northern pillar and the pier is blocked by a wall of limestone masonry, in the middle of which is cut a vertical squint, measuring \(0.74 \times 0.15\) m. from the outside, and \(0.60\) m. from the inside. This same pillar is connected with the western wall by means of a partition wall, the lower courses of which are still in situ. The space thus enclosed was used to form a serdab.

The ceiling was intended to be on a lower level than that of section ‘A’, but was left unfinished.

In the floor of this serdab is the opening of Shaft No. 1350. The floor of the southern half of the Chapel ‘B’ is occupied by Shafts Nos. 1351 and 1352.

The Limestone Statuettes

The Limestone Statuettes of Spss-nesut and Nfr.t-iw.s

From the soft sand filling the entrance to the chapel, we recovered the following group of statuary:

Material.—White limestone.

Preservation.—Not very good. The heads of both figures are lacking. The right breast, hand and knee of the woman are damaged, and the surface of her back is chipped off as far as the waist. The right side of her chair is also chipped and grazed. The man’s figure has fared little better, and in addition to the loss of the head, it has sustained damage to both shoulders, particularly the left one.

Workmanship.—Fair. Owing to the lack of the heads, the part of the figure upon which the Egyptian sculptor lavished his greatest care, it is difficult to judge the real artistic merit of the group, as the bodies were usually given summary treatment, even when the heads display first-rate workmanship. These two figures appear somewhat heavy, though, of course, the sitters may have been a comfortably plump couple, and the details of the carving are not finely finished. Nevertheless, they have the saving grace of appearing to be firmly seated fair and square upon their chairs, and there is a certain restful air of serenity in their pose.
Description.—The group represents a man and a woman (probably they were husband and wife) seated upon two chairs, the latter being rendered by a single rectangular block divided by a groove down its middle. The woman is seated with her feet placed together, and her hands resting palm downwards upon her lap. Her short, plump body is clad in the usual tight-fitting ankle-length garment of the Old Kingdom. The man is seated in a similar attitude, but has his right hand closed and turned palm downwards upon his lap. He is clad in a short, tight kilt, upheld by a belt around the hips.

\begin{align*}
1 & \text{shd-rh. njswt pr-} \text{“Inspector of the King’s Relatives of the Court”}.
2 & \text{Spss-njswt”}.
\end{align*}

On the right side of the woman’s chair are two horizontal rows of incised hieroglyphs, reading:—

\begin{align*}
1 & \text{rht njswt hm.t nfr Ht-Hr “King’s Relative, Priestess of Hathor”}.
2 & \text{Nfr.t-iw.s” (Pls. XIX. A, B, XX. A, B).}

Grave-pit: 1.20 \( \times \) 1.20 \( \times \) 4.80 m. deep; sloping to a large burial-chamber on the west; aperture partly opened.

Burial: A skeleton scattered in disorder upon the floor, and some fragments of decayed wood.
A dramatic touch was given to the examination of this burial-chamber by the presence of human footprints in the dust lying around the body. These footprints, which record the impression of two pairs of bare feet (apparently those of a man and a boy) were probably made by the robbers who plundered the burial in antiquity (see Pls. XXI, A, B, XXII).

The figures of two other persons are represented in the tomb, but the inscriptions giving their names and titles are effaced.

Situation

The Mastaba of Princess Hm.t-R' lies to the south-east of that of Iwn-R', and west of that of Snb.w-k3. It is situated at the western end of a sloping passage which runs parallel to the great Causeway of King Khafra (see General Plan 8-N).

Description

The main structure of this mastaba is hewn out of the solid rock, and possesses only a few minor additions of masonry.

As mentioned above, access to it is gained by means of a sloping passage, measuring 18'10 x 1'30 m. This passage is almost entirely rock-cut, but has some supplementary limestone masonry in its northern wall. This passage was occupied by burial pits, most probably built during the First Intermediate Period (see General Plan). Some late burials built of rubble and mud-brick are constructed against the western wall of the mastaba.

The Entrance.

The entrance of this mastaba opens east, and measures 2'00 x 1'20 x 2'33 m. The top of the doorway is recessed from its inner side in order to receive the stone bearing the socket-holes for a double-leaved wooden door.

(*) See Ranke, "Die Aegyptischen Personennamen", p. 38.
The Lintel (Fig. 36, Pl. XXIII, A)

The lintel is carved in the rock of the façade, and bears three rows of hieroglyphs sculptured in relief and reading:—

(1) "A boon which the King gives, and a boon which Anubis, Lord of the Sacred Land Presiding Over the God's Dwelling (gives), and a boon which Osiris gives, a burial in the Necropolis of the western desert after a very good old age."

(2) "That offerings of bread (beer, cakes) and oxen may come forth to her at the voice, at the Opening Day of the Year Feast, the Feast of Thoth, the First of the Year Feast, the W3h Feast, the Feast of Skr, the Great Feast, the Feast of Burning, the W3h-'h Feast, the Feast of the Coming Forth of Min, the Monthly Feast, the Sif Feast."

The Drum (Fig. 36, Pl. XXIII, B)

The drum is also cut out of the solid rock, and is sculptured in relief with two horizontal rows of hieroglyphs, reading:—

(1) "The King's Eldest Daughter of His Body, the Priestess of the Goddess Ht-Hr. Hm.t-R'."

(2) "The Honoured One by the Great God, She Who Does What Her Father Likes Every Day."
The Right Thickness (Fig. 37, Pl. XXIV, B)

This thickness is in a rather bad condition owing to the erosion of the surface of the stone. It bears two superposed registers sculptured in relief.

In the upper register is represented a procession of offering bearers, alternately male and female (1), facing west. The three leading figures are in a good state of preservation, and the first, which is a man, bears a basket upon his head, and a live duck in his left hand. In front of him is inscribed the name of the estate, of which he is the representative, \( \text{Spss-H'j-f-R'}. \)

(1) See KLEBS, "Der Reliefs des Alten Reiches", p. 31, Fig. 18; and Williams, "Decoration of the Tomb of Per-nak", PI. VII, VIII.
The second figure, a woman, carries only a basket upon her head. In front of her is inscribed

\[ w'b\cdot Hj.f-R'. \]

The third figure represents a man carrying a basket upon his head and a parcel of cheese in his left hand. Before him is inscribed:

\[ Nfr-Hsm-(Hj.f-R'). \]

The fourth figure is destroyed, and of the fifth figure only the legs of a man, who carries a bird in his left hand, remain. In front of him is inscribed:

\[ "... Hj.f-R'". \]

A natural fault of the rock must have occurred in the middle part of this register, and two pieces of limestone were cut and dressed to shape, and fitted into the gap in an attempt to remedy this defect.

In the second register three herdsmen are represented leading two fatted oxen into the tomb. The animals, magnificent specimens of a long-horned breed, wear ornamental collars around their necks. The first ox is led into the chapel by a man who carries a bundle of fodder (?) under his left arm. Above the ox is inscribed in relief:

\[ "Bringing the ox [as] an offering". \]

The second ox seems to be refractory and tosses up its head. The herdsman turns to face it, grasping its head-rope with both hands. Another man walks behind the ox and stretches his right hand towards it, while his left hand is placed upon his shoulder. Above the ox is inscribed:

\[ "Bringing the ox . . . ". \]

The left thickness bears these superposed registers sculptured in relief, the upper one being somewhat effaced.

In the right-hand side of this register is the representation of six men hauling upon a rope, perhaps attached to a sledge. The remainder of this scene is totally effaced.
In the second register is a procession of offering bearers, again alternately male and female. The first bearer carries a basket upon his head, and a live duck in his right hand; before him is inscribed the name of the estate which he represents: \[ Dj-H'.j.f-R' \]. The second bearer, a woman, carries a basket upon her head, and a cheese in her right hand; before her is inscribed \[ In.t.f.t. \].

The third bearer carries a basket (?) on his head, and a small basket in his right hand. He represents the estate: \[ Nfr-w-Hsm-H'.j.f-R' \].

The fourth figure bears a basket (?) upon her head, and carries a live duck in her right hand; before her is inscribed: \[ Nfr-iset-H'.j.f-R' \].
EXCAVATIONS AT GIZA, 1934-1935

Then follows a group composed of two men and an oryx. One man stands before it as though to prevent it from rushing forward, while the other man is behind it, grasping its tail and rump. The head of the animal is lacking.

In the third register is another representation of three herdsmen leading two fatted oxen into the tomb. These oxen also wear ornamental collars around their necks.

In front of the first herdman is inscribed: 𓊒𓊔 𓊯𓊬𓊯𓊪𓊫𓊭 “Overseer of the Herd (l)”. and above the ox is inscribed: 𓊓𓊰𓊬𓊫𓊫𓊮𓊭 𓊱𓊬𓊪𓊭 “Bringing the ox as a gift”.

The same inscription is carved in relief above the second ox. This animal, which has a deformed and in-growing horn, is led by a man carrying a stick in his left hand, while another man, also armed with a stick, drives it from the rear.

The Chapel

This doorway gives access to a spacious chapel, measuring 11.0 x 6.0 m., the roof of which is supported by four square pillars hewn out of the solid rock. This chapel was re-employed as a later burial-place, and thirteen skeletons were found lying upon the floor. Among these remains, the following have a certain interest:

(a) The skeleton of an adult extended upon its back, with the head near the southern face of the southern pillar. Fragments of a white plaster mask were found upon the ground, close to the right side of the head (Pl. XXV. B). A bead necklace encircled its neck (Pl. XXV. A) and a pottery jar, with a long neck and a tapering body, was found near the right foot.

(b) The skeleton of a young person, lying on its right side with the head to the north-west, and the legs sharply contracted. A small pot with a rounded body and a short neck lay at a little distance in front of the chest.

(c) The skeleton of an adult, extended upon the back, with the head to the north. Some fragments of a plaster mask were found near the right side of the face (Pl. XXV, C).

At a distance of 2.25 m. from the north wall of the chapel is a partition wall cut in the rock to a height of 2.50 m., and completed, partly by three courses of limestone masonry, and partly by rubble. A narrow, rectangular opening (1.25 x 1.15 m.) situated in the rubble part of the wall, appears to be the squint of a serdab, although the height at which it is situated (0.70 m. from the floor of the chapel) would render a view of the statues extremely difficult to obtain. An aperture measuring 0.65 x 0.95 m., is cut in the eastern end of this partition wall, and gives access to a small chamber, measuring about 3.40 x 2.25 m. (in reality, the northern end of the main chapel), the floor of which is 0.70 m. higher than that of the rest of chapel. Immediately to the west of this aperture, and south of the partition wall, the opening of Shaft No. 1337 is cut in the floor. The whole of the north wall lying behind the partition, as well as to the west of the pillars is in an unfinished state.

[This page is intentionally blank.]
The Southern Wall

Three and a half metres from the south-eastern corner, a rock-cut plaster projects from the southern wall and conforms with the rock-cut pillars. Immediately to the north of it is an aperture, measuring 0.70 x 1.15 m., and giving access to a small, low-roofed chamber, measuring 2.20 x 1.40 m. It contained some disturbed skeletons. In front of this aperture, and against the western wall of the chapel is a small, unfinished shaft. No. 1336.

The Western Wall

Two metres and sixty-five cms. from the southern end of the western wall is cut a small, unfinished false-door measuring 0.80 m. wide. In front of it, and lying between the northern pair of pillars is the entrance to a steep, sloping passage, which leads down to an unfinished burial-chamber.

This passage was found to be partially filled with limestone debris, and the burial-chamber contained only a few disturbed skeletons.

Situated in this wall, and on the same axis as the main entrance, is the doorway giving access to the inner room of the chapel.

The Pillars

The main feature of interest in the tomb is the four pillars which support the roof of the main chapel.

The northern pillar is in an unfinished state, being still undetached from the bed-rock in its upper parts, and is devoid of decoration (1). The other three pillars are well finished, and most of their faces bear reliefs depicting the Princess Hm.t-R', together with her children and attendants. These figures testify in every detail to the skill of the artist who wrought them; and while adhering strictly to the iron convention of Egyptian Art, the large portraits of the Princess display a pleasing grace of line allied to a dignified bearing, that cannot fail to claim our admiration. The fact that some of these relief still bear their original paintings, executed in brilliant colours, and with a minute attention to detail, tends to enhance their beauty.

These pillars (dimensions: 0.80 x 0.80 x 3.00 m. high) will be described according to their order from north to south.

The First Pillar

The Eastern Face (Fig. 39, Pl. XXVI, A)

The scene is bordered on its right and left sides by a frame of rectangles coloured light blue and dark yellow, alternately. The Princess is shown in a standing attitude with her right hand

---

(1) This fact, together with rough state of the northern wall and other accessory parts of the tomb, indicate that Princess Hm.t-R' died a premature death before the completion of her tomb, or perhaps was prevented from its completion for an unknown reason.
EXCAVATIONS AT GIZA, 1934–1935

placed open upon her breast, and her left arm hanging by her side. She wears a long black wig, a broad necklace and bracelets, and is clad in a close-fitting garment of a dark green colour. Above her head is a horizontal row of coloured hieroglyphs, reading: “The King’s Daughter of His Body, Ḥm.t-R’”.

In front of her are two vertical rows of hieroglyphs, reading:

2. “The Priestess of Ḥt-Hr, Ḥm.t-R’.”

Below this inscription is the figure of the Overseer of the Ka-servants, one Šnb.w-kt. This official, while on a smaller scale than the figure of the Princess, is yet represented on a larger scale than any other priest depicted in this tomb. This may be due to the importance of his position (1).

He is shown in a walking attitude, his left hand clasping a roll of papyrus to his bosom, and his right arm hanging by his side, with the hand closed upon the unknown object. Above his head is a horizontal row of hieroglyphs, reading: “The Honoured by His Master”.

The Southern Face (Fig. 40, Pl. XXVI, B)

On the southern face of the pillar, the Princess is represented in the same attitude as described above, but is reversed in direction. She wears a long wig, a long tight robe, a ‘dog-collar necklace’, and wide bracelets and anklets, these latter being coloured dark and light blue, perhaps to represent lapis lazuli and turquoise. Above her head is a horizontal row of hieroglyphs, reading: “The King’s Daughter of His Body, the Priestess of the Goddess Ḥt-Hr, Ḥm.t-R’”.

In front of her are three superposed registers, in the top one of which are represented two men. The foremost man is reading from a roll of papyrus held out spread in his two hands. Above his head is inscribed horizontally: “The Steward, Šnb.w-kt’”.

The second man is making a gesture of respect by placing his left hand upon his right shoulder. He carries a roll of papyrus in his right hand, and above his head is a horizontal row of hieroglyphs, reading: “The Scribe, Šrj’.”

(1) Šnb.w-kt has his tomb situated in the southern wall of the passage leading to the Mastaba of Ḥm.t-R’, an honour doubtless accorded to him by his Royal Mistress.
In the second register two scribes are represented, each carries a palette in his left hand and a reed pen in his right hand, and two spare pens stuck behind their right ears.

The Second Pillar

It is sculptured in relief on three of its faces, the scenes being enclosed within ornamental borders similar to those on the first pillar.

The Eastern Face (Fig. 41, Pl. XXVI, C)

Princess Ḥm.t-R' is shown in the same attitude in which she appears upon the first pillar. Her wig is painted black, and she wears two necklaces, one of the "dog-collar" type, and the other a "usekh collar". Wide bracelets and anklets adorn her wrists and ankles. She wears a long tight role, upheld by variegated coloured braces, and entirely covered by a net-work of red and green beads, which were presumably sewn onto the fabric of the garment. Above her head a horizontal row of hieroglyphs, reads: "The King's Daughter of His Body, Ḥm.t-R'".

In front of the Princess are three superposed registers, in which are depicted five of her children, three sons and two daughters.

In the top register is represented a man. He is in a walking attitude, facing the Princess; he carries a roll of papyrus in his right hand, while his left hand rests closed upon his chest. In front of him a vertical row of hieroglyphs reads: "Her son, the King's Relative Šps-k1.w".

In the second register are the figures of two more men, both of whom are represented in a walking attitude, facing the Princess, the left hand placed closed upon their chests, and the right arm hanging at the side. In front of the right-hand figure is a vertical row of hieroglyphs, reading: "Her son, the King's Relative 3h-R".

In front of the second man is inscribed vertically: "Her son, the King's Relative Šps-R'- ëryj".

In the third register are the figures of two women; both are represented standing, the left hand placed open upon the breast, and the right arm hanging by the side. They wear long wigs, two necklaces, and long, tight robes; the right-hand figure also wears anklets. In front of this latter figure a vertical row of hieroglyphs reads: "Her daughter, the King's Relative, Htp-hrs".

The Southern Face (Fig 42, Pl. XXVII, A)

On the southern face of the pillar, the Princess is represented in the same attitude. Above her head a horizontal row of hieroglyphs reads: "The King's Daughter of His Body, beloved by him, Ḥm.t-R".

In front of her are three registers, in the upper one of which is depicted a man holding a censer. In front of him is inscribed: "The Overseer of the House (Steward), Kįj".

In the second register is the representation of a man holding a live goose in each hand, while a third goose lies dead upon the ground before him. These birds are coloured bright blue (1). In front of the man's face a horizontal row of hieroglyphs reads: "The Ka-servant, Mnj".

The third register contains the figure of another man holding a blue goose in each hand. In front of his face is inscribed his name: "Nd.f-R".

The Northern Face (Fig. 43, Pl. XXVII, B)

The figure of the Princess is similar to that depicted on the southern face of the pillar. Above her head, an identical horizontal row of hieroglyphs reads: "The King's Daughter, beloved by him, Ḥm.t-R".

In front of her are three superposed registers, each of which contains the figure of a man. The topmost man holds a censer, and in front of him is inscribed vertically: "The Ka-servant, Nd.f-R".

(1) For the meaning of these rites, see "Excavations at Giza", Vol. VI, Part II, p. 84, f.).
In the second register, the man carries a long linen band suspended from each hand. In front of him, a vertical row of hieroglyphs reads: "The Ka-servant, Ij-m-htp".

In the bottom register, the man is depicted carrying a small chest, and in front of him is a vertical inscription, reading: "The Ka-servant, Hr-nfr".

The Southern Pillar

The Eastern Face (Fig. 44. PI. XXVIII)

In front of her are three superposed registers, in the upper one of which is a representation of Snb.w-ks burning incense before his Mistress. In front of him is inscribed: "The Overseer of the Ka-servants, Snb.w-ks".

In the second register is the figure of a man holding a long-stemmed lotus blossom with both hands. In front of him is inscribed: "The King's Relative, her son Špas-*R'-srj (1)".

The Northern Face (Pl. XXVII, C)

In this scene Princess Hm.t-R' is standing with her right hand placed open upon her breast and her left arm hanging at her side. Her close-fitting robe is embroidered all over with a network of blue beads, and is supported by multi-coloured braces. Above her head a horizontal row of hieroglyphs reads: "The King's Daughter of His body, beloved by him Hm.t-R'".

(*) Dr. Reisner in his volume "History of the Giza Necropolis", p. 229, states that Hm.t-R' was married to a man called Špas-*R' from the fact that she had a son called Špas-*R'-srj. For our suggestion for the husband of Hm.t-R' see p. 66.
In the uppermost of the three registers \textit{Snj-w-kj} is represented holding a lotus blossom in his left hand, the long stem of which is looped over his right hand. In front of him is inscribed: "The Overseer of the Ka-servants, \textit{Snj-w-kj}".

In the second register are the figures of two men, the first of whom is wringing the neck of a duck. In front of him is inscribed: "The Ka-servant, \textit{Snj}".

The second man carries a lotus blossom in each hand. Above his head an inscription reads: "The Ka-servant, \textit{St-mrj}".

\textbf{The Western Face (Fig. 45, Pl. XXIX)}

The Princess is represented in the same attitude as in the preceding scene. Above her head the stone has been carefully smoothed and prepared to receive an inscription, but was nevertheless left blank. In front of her are three superposed registers, each containing the figures of two men.

The left-hand figure in the topmost register carries a large covered bowl in both hands. In front of him is inscribed: "The Ka-servant, the Director of the Hall of Food (Caterer), \textit{Nd.f-R}".
The second man carries a tray in both his hands, it is laden with three loaves of bread. Before him is inscribed: "The Ka-servant, Dw-nb-pw".

The left-hand man in the second register carries a tray, piled up with figs, in both his hands. The inscription in front of him reads: "The Ka-servant, Nj-sw-kd".

The heads of the two figures in the bottom register are effaced. The left-hand man carries a tray in both hands, while the second man carries a vase in each hand. The inscriptions in this register are totally effaced.

The Southern Face

The southern face of this pillar remains unfinished, and bears only the outlines of a preliminary sketch of the figure of Princess Hm.t-R, drawn in red paint.

Between these pillars the ceiling is painted red, and is cut 0.40 metre higher in the eastern side to form an architrave.

The Inner Chapel

The entrance to the inner chapel measures 1.35 m. in width, and, as mentioned above, is situated in the southern half of the western wall of the main chapel. It has a rebate running along the whole of its outer face, and was originally closed by means of a double-leaved wooden door, the socket-stone of which remains in place at the top of the doorway.

The Lintel (Fig. 46, Pl. XXIII, C)

This lintel is carved out of the solid rock; it measures 2.90 × 0.45 m., and bears two horizontal rows of hieroglyphs, carved in relief, and reading:

(1) "A boon which the King gives, and a boon, which Anubis, Presiding Over the God's Dwelling [gives] a burial in the western desert after a very good old age [to] the Possessor of Honour in the Presence of the Great God, Hm.t-R."

(2) "That offerings of bread, cake, and beer may come forth to her at the voice, in the Opening Day of the Year Feast, the Feast of Thoth, the First of the Year Feast, the Wag Feast, the Great Feast, the Feast of Burning, the Feast of the Coming-Forth of Min, the Wf-h Feast, the Monthly Feast, the Sph Feast, the Feast of the Beginning of the Month, the Feast of the Beginning of the Half-Month, every good feast, and every day, to the King's Daughter, beloved by him."
At the end of this inscription, the Princess is represented seated upon a stool. In front of her is a vertical row of hieroglyphs, reading: "The King’s Daughter of His Body, Hm.t-R’".

A few traces of blue colour still remain on some of the hieroglyphs.

The inner chapel measures 5.75 x 3.10 m. At the right-hand side of the western wall, there is an uninscribed false-door, 0.80 m. wide, carved in the rock. To the left of this false-door is a small niche measuring 0.40 x 0.67 m., which probably contained a statuette of the Princess.

A square shaft (No. 1358) is cut in the floor of this inner chapel, and leads to the burial-chamber of Princess Hm.t-R’, which was found to be empty. Around the mouth of the shaft was piled a large part of the limestone blocks with which it was filled.

The Dating of the Tomb

There is nothing in this tomb to indicate its exact date, but the fact that the name of the God Osiris is involved in an offering-formula (see lintel of main entrance) coupled with the occurrence of the name of King Shepesa-ka-f as an element of a personal name (see First Pillar, southern face, bottom register), precludes the possibility of its being any earlier than the beginning of the Fifth Dynasty.

The Identity of Princess Hm.t-R’

Although we have no definite evidence as to the parentage of Princess Hm.t-R’ beyond the fact that she was certainly the daughter of a king, there are several facts which seem to indicate that she was a descendant of King ‘Hj.f-R’, probably upon her mother’s side.

The evidence in favour of this theory is as follows:

1. The Tomb of Hm.t-R’ bears a close affinity to the uninscribed tomb which lies to the north of that of Nb-m-dh.t, occupying the same ridge of rock. (This cliff was apparently reserved for the tombs of the members of the royal family.) It is also allied to the Tombs of Dbdnj, Iwm-Mn.w and Shm-kf-R’, the last two of whom are known to be of the family of King ‘Hj.f-R’.

2. With one exception, the names of the estates of Hm.t-R’ are compounded with the names of King Hj.f-R’ (see the thickness of the main entrance), and this is also the case with the estate names of most of the above-named princes.
(3) The name of the daughters of Hm.t-R' are the same as those borne by the prominent ladies of the royal family of the Fourth Dynasty, Htp-hrs and Mrs'-nh. The name of Hnt-ktw.s; the third daughter, was also borne by the queen who formed the connecting link between the Fourth and Fifth Dynasties, and it is not improbably that Hm.t-R' was either a daughter or near descendant of this latter lady.

The fact that Hm.t-R' was the mother of children presupposes that she was married, but she does not bear the title King's Wife, nor is any mention made in her tomb of her husband. Therefore, we may assume that she was married to some person of non-royal rank. Perhaps her husband was Sub.w-k3, the Priest, who is represented so prominently in her tomb, and whose own burial-place is in the near vicinity.

2. \( \text{imj-ri prj} \) "Overseer of the House (Steward)".

3. \( \text{imj-ri hm.w.k3} \) "Overseer of the Ka-servants".

4. \( \text{nb imib hr nrjr} \) "Possessor of Honour in the Presence of the Great God".

5. \( \text{imibce hr nb.f} \) "Honoured by His Master (the King)".

SITUATION

The Mastaba of Snb.w-k1 is situated at the western end of the southern wall of the sloping passage leading to the Tomb of Princess Hm.t-R (see General Plan 8-N).

DESCRIPTION

The Entrance

The main entrance of the mastaba measures 0.90 x 0.80 m. and is cut in the southern wall of the passage leading to the Tomb of Princess Hm.t-R', and at a distance of 6.50 m. from the entrance of the latter. It opens northwards.

The Lintel (Fig. 51, Pl. XXX, A)

The lintel of local limestone is in a good state of preservation, and bears two horizontal rows of finely inscribed hieroglyphs, reading: "A boon, which the King gives, and a boon, which Anubis, Presiding over the God's Dwelling (gives), a burial in the western desert after a good old age (to) the King's Relative, the Steward, the Overseer of the Ka-servants, the Possessor of Honour in the Presence of the Great God, the Honoured by His Master".

\(^{(1)}\) Owing to the similarity of the name and titles of the owner of this tomb to those borne by the Overseer of the Ka-servants of Princess Hm.t-R', coupled with the fact that this tomb is in the immediate vicinity of that of the latter lady (see p. 66), we may safely say they are the same person. A similar example may be seen in the case of Kl-m-nfr.t, the Overseer of the Ka-servants of Queen Rhi.t-R', whose tomb is also built in the vicinity of that of his mistress (see p. 19, f.).
EXCAVATIONS AT GÎZA, 1934-1935

Mastaba of Senebw-Ka
No. 7
At the end of the inscription is a representation of the deceased in a walking attitude. He carries a handkerchief in his right hand, and a long staff in his left hand. In front of him is incised his name "Snb.w-kj". It is to be noticed that the last element of his name (ka) was originally written with the sign \( \text{ja} \), the lower part of which is still visible; it was then partially erased and replaced by the sign \( \text{ka} \), for the sake of symmetry.

The Drum (Fig. 51, Pl. XXX, A)

It is of good-quality local limestone, and is inscribed in relief with a horizontal row of hieroglyphs, reading: "The King's Relative, the Steward, the Overseer of the Ka-servants, Snb.w-kj".

The Chapel

This entrance gives access to a hall, measuring 6:10 x 2:65 m. and which is partially hewn in the natural rock. The upper part of both the northern and eastern walls are supplemented by courses of local limestone masonry.

The southern and south-eastern portions of the roof are rock-cut, the remainder being composed of local limestone slabs, some of which still remain \textit{in situ}. The northern roofing slabs rest upon a square, monolithic architrave 4:80 m. long, the latter being supported by two monolithic pillars (0:46 x 0:32 m.) of local limestone, measuring 2:65 m. in height.
Two later pits were built against the northern wall of this chapel, undoubtedly after the tomb had become buried in the debris. They contained damaged skeletons.

The southern half of the chapel is entirely rock-hewn. A shallow pit (No. 1353) is cut in the floor of the south-eastern corner; it contained a damaged skeleton. In the south end of the western wall is cut a shallow irregular recess, which contained a heap of bones. To the south of the recess an aperture 0·70 x 0·50 x 1·00 m. was cut through the wall, into the inner chamber. This aperture, and apparently the recess as well, were blocked with limestone masonry. Another aperture, measuring 1·60 x 0·50 x 1·25 m., cut a little to the north of the preceding one, gives access to the low-roofed inner chapel, which measures 3·90 x 1·40 m. The floor of this chamber is almost entirely occupied by the openings of Shafts Nos. 1354 and 1355. In its western wall are cut two small uninscribed false-doors.

Grave-pit: 1·05 x 1·05 x 2·95 m. deep; side-chamber on the west; aperture partly closed by one horizontal slab of limestone; recess cut in the floor near to the west wall, and closed with limestone slabs, two of which remain in situ.

11. 𓊇𓊇𓊇𓊂 “Honoured by His Master”.

12. 𓊇𓊇𓊇𓊂 “King’s Relative”.

SITUATION

The Mastaba of KJ-HR-ST.F lies to the north-west of that of ‘nh-tf (see General Plan 9, 10-R).

Great difficulty was experienced in excavating and tracing the original structures of this mastaba owing to the large number of later burials with which the site was encumbered. Three graves were constructed in the passage leading to the outer chapel, two others were made in the chapel itself, one having its burial-chamber cut in the western wall, and the other constructed in the doorway of the inner chapel. Some other intrusive burials occupied the whole space lying on the west of the mastaba.

This state of affairs is due to the revolution which took place throughout Egypt after the collapse of the Pharaonic power at the end of the Sixth Dynasty, when the unguarded necropoli were subjected to fierce despoilation.

DESCRIPTION

The superstructure of this tomb is built of medium-sized blocks of local limestone, the upper courses being destroyed.

The Main Entrance

The main entrance, which measures 0.68 m. wide, opens west, being situated in the southern end of the western wall of the mastaba. This orientation is most unusual and is probably due to the limited and crowded space which the ancient architect had at his disposal.

The Lintel (Fig. 58, Pl. XXX, B)

The lintel is formed of a single large slab of local limestone, and is slightly damaged at its upper edge. It was found broken into two pieces, and had been re-employed in the roofing of a later burial built just in front of the main entrance. It is incised with two horizontal rows of hieroglyphs, reading: "A boon which the King gives, and a boon which Anubis, Presiding Over the God's Dwelling [gives], that he may be buried in the western desert after a very good old age, and that offerings of bread, beer, and wine, oxen and geese may come forth to him at every feast and every day. The King's Purificator, the Royal Inspector of the Cooling Drinks, the Overseer of the Ka-servants of the King's Wife (1), Krij-hr-st.f."

EXCAVATIONS AT GIZA, 1934-1335

The Outer Chapel

At a distance of 1.60 m. from the main entrance, a flight of nine rock-cut steps leads down to the outer chapel (3.00 x 1.68 m.). The lower part of this chapel is hewn in the solid rock, with the addition of about seven courses of local limestone masonry added above. The upper part of the eastern wall is formed by the western wall of the ruined mastaba lying to its east, while the lower, rock-cut part is wholly occupied by a large niche containing four life-sized statues, beautifully carved in the rock of the wall.

The Statues (Pls. XXXI, A, B, XXXII, A, B, C)

The upper parts of these figures, and especially the faces, are in an excellent state of preservation, but the lower parts have unfortunately suffered somewhat from the action of moisture and salt. The workmanship displayed in this group is an eloquent testimony to the skill of the sculptor who wrought them. The pleasant, smiling faces possess the individuality of feature and expression that marks a successful portrait-statue. The niche is cut on an axis with the main entrance, so that the statues face west, and appear to be stepping forward to receive and welcome the visitors to the tomb.

The First Statue (Right-Hand Side)

It represents a mature man of well-developed physique, most probably K3h-3r-st.f, himself. He is shown in a walking attitude, the left leg advanced, the arms hanging by the sides, with the hands clenched upon the unknown object. He wears the short wig, and a kilt with a triangular apron. Height: 1.60 m. Breadth across shoulders: 0.45 m.

The Second Statue

The second statue represents a woman, undoubtedly the wife of the deceased. She is represented in a standing attitude, with her feet together, arms hanging by her sides, with the hands open. She wears a short, heavy wig, and a long, tight-fitting robe. Her slender body and firmly rounded breasts are so well modelled that even the flaking and erosion of the stone has failed to utterly destroy their beauty. Height: 1.60 m. Breadth across the shoulders: 0.38 m.

The Third Statue

It also seems to represent the owner of the tomb, and shows him in the prime of his life. He wears a long wig, brushed back, and revealing the ears, and is clad in a short kilt, with a pleated side wrap. He is in a walking attitude, the left leg advanced, and the arms hanging by the sides with the hands clenched. Traces of black paint can be seen upon the pupils of the eyes. The whole bearing of the figure is one of vigour and vitality, and the forward stepping leg, combined with the backward sweep of the wig, convey a sense of vigorous, forward movement that is almost startling in its realism. Height: 1.65 m. Breadth across shoulders: 0.45 m.

The Fourth Statue

This figure, which was never completed, represents a child, and stands beside the right leg of the woman. It measures 0.67 m. in height.
The Granite Statuette (Pls. XXXI, XXXII)

A statuette of gray granite, in an excellent state of preservation, was found standing between the left leg of the first statue and southern wall of the chapel, doubtless its original position. It presents a good example of typical Old-Kingdom work, and represents the deceased in a walking attitude, with the left leg advanced. His arms hang by his sides with the hands clenched upon the unknown object. He wears a short, plaited wig, and a short kilt with a pleated side wrap. It appears to represent \textit{Kjj-hr-st.f} in his old-age, and the face is clearly a portrait. On the right side of the pedestal is incised: \begin{MathEquation}
\begin{align*}
\text{The King's Relative, the Honoured by His Master}.
\end{align*}
\end{MathEquation}

On the left side of the pedestal is inscribed: \begin{MathEquation}
\begin{align*}
\text{The Overseer of the Royal Pr-nef (in Dep.), the Overseer of the Ka-servants of the King's Wife, Kjj-hr-st.f}.
\end{align*}
\end{MathEquation}

In the western wall of the chapel was a large niche containing another life-sized statue in the first stages of execution, but the lower part has been cut away when a recess for a later burial was made in this spot.

The Entrance to the Inner Chapel

The entrance to the inner chapel is situated in the southern wall of the outer chapel, and measures $1.99 \times 0.66 \times 0.54$ m.

The Lintel (Fig. 59, Pl. XXXIII, A)

The lintel of this entrance is carved in the solid rock, and bears two horizontal row of incised hieroglyphs, reading: "A boon which the King gives, and a boon which Anubis, Presiding Over the God's Dwelling [gives], a burial in the western desert, after a very good old age before the Great God, and that offerings of bread, beer, cakes geese and oxen, may come forth to him at the \end{align*}

\end{MathEquation}
At the end of the inscription is a lightly incised representation of the owner of the tomb. He is shown seated upon a chair, and holding a long staff in his left hand, while his right hand rests upon his lap. This lintel was coated with a layer of plaster, many traces of which remain upon it.

The Inner Chapel

It measures $2.75 \times 2.10 \times 2.10$ m. and is wholly cut in the natural rock. In the western wall are cut two false-doors, the northern one of which is much damaged, and was apparently uninscribed.

The Southern False-Door (Fig. 60, Pl. XXXIII, B)

It is in a better state of preservation than its neighbour, and measures $0.40 \times 1.75$ m. Only the upper lintel and the panel are inscribed.

The Lintel

It is incised with two horizontal rows of hieroglyphs, reading: “A boon, which the King gives, and a boon which Anubis, Presiding Over the God’s Dwelling [gives], a burial in the west after a very good old age, [and that] offerings of bread, beer, and cakes may come forth to him at the Opening Day of the Year Feast, the Feast of Thoth, the First of the Year Feast, and at every feast . . . $K\bar{s}-hr-st.f$”.

On the panel is sculptured in relief a representation of the deceased. He is shown rested upon a chair, his right hand outstretched to an offering-table which is set before him. Above the table is inscribed in relief: “The King’s Relative, $K\bar{s}-hr-st.f$”.

At the base of the western wall is a raised platform $0.25$ m. high, carved in the rock, and running the whole length of the wall.

In the roof an aperture measuring $0.47 \times 0.47$ m. is cut in the rock. It is situated at a distance of $0.70$ m. from the western wall. This aperture passes upwards, piercing the filling of the mastaba and inclines towards the east, being undoubtedly constructed to admit the light of the rising sun into the chapel.

SITUATION

This mastaba lies to the west of that of Ki-dwj, and to the west of that of Nj-kj.w-Ht-Hr (see General Plan 7-0).

DESCRIPTION

The entrance of the mastaba opens eastward and measures 0.60 m. wide by 0.50 m. deep.

The Drum (Fig. 64, Pl. XXXIV, B)

The drum bears the following inscription, reading: "The King's Relative, King's Purificato, the Inspector of the Court, Hmw'."

(1) See also Reisner O. 7211 (\( \text{rēh-njεnt} \)).
The Lintel (Fig. 65, Pl. XXXIV, A)

The lintel bears two rows of well-cut hieroglyphs, reading: "A boon which the King gives, and a boon, which Anubis, who Presides Over the God's Dwelling [gives] a burial to him in the western desert after a very good old age as an honoured one, before the God; and that offerings of bread, cake, and beer may come forth to him in the Opening Day of the Year Feast, the Feast of Thoth, the First of the Year Feast, the Wp-Feast, the Feast of Skr, the Great Feast; and every feast and every day, [to the] Inspector of the Court, the King's Relative, Hmw".

At the end of the inscription is a representation of the deceased, seated upon a chair.

Both of the door-thicknesses were found fallen down in front of the entrance. They are of white Turah limestone, and are very beautifully sculptured in relief.

The Right Thickness (Fig. 66, Pl. XXXV).

The right thickness bears a large figure of the owner of the tomb. He is represented in a walking attitude, and holds a long staff in his left hand, and a handkerchief in his right one. He wears a curled wig, a false beard, and a short kilt with a triangular apron. Above his head are three vertical rows of hieroglyphs, reading: "The Priest of the Sun-temple of King Nj-wsr-R, the King's Relative, the Priest of Nj-wsr-R', the King's Purificator, Hmw".

In front of the figure of Hmw is the representation of a man, depicted upon a much smaller scale. He grasps the lower part of the staff of Hmw with his left hand, and he is probably intended to represent the son of the deceased. Behind him is a vertical row of hieroglyphs, reading: \[\text{"The Court, Shm-R"}\].

THE MASTABA OF HMW AND SPSS-K'I.F-'NH

Below this scene is a narrow register in which is depicted a woman, symbolizing an estate of the deceased, leading an ox. The woman bears upon her head a basket laden with the produce of the estate which she represents, the name of which ḫmj s'nh Mn-kj.w-Hr, is inscribed before her.

Above the back of the ox is a vertical inscription, reading: "The Presentation of a young ox".

The scenes on this thickness have been badly affected by moisture, and the upper part of the large figure of the deceased has almost entirely disappeared. The scenes are the same as those depicted upon the right thickness, and the only variations occur in the inscriptions. Above the head of the large figure of the owner of the tomb are three vertical rows of hieroglyphs, reading: "The Friend of the House, the Secretary, the King's Purificator, the King's Relative, the Priest of the Sun-temple of King Mn-kj.w-Hr".

The name of the estate, inscribed in the bottom register, is: Mr-'nh Pth Nj-wsr-R'.

This doorway gives access to a passage measuring 8'80 x 1'0 m., running from north to south and having two false-doors in its western wall.

The Northern False-Door (Fig. 68, Pl. XXXVII, B)

It is composed of local limestone.

The Upper Lintel

It is of white limestone, and was found lying on the ground in front of the false-door; it is incomplete, but bears two rows of hieroglyphs, reading:

"A boon which the King gives, and a boon which Anubis, who Presides over the God's Dwelling (gives) (that he may be buried in) the Western Desert after a very good old age, and that he may walk . . . before the God".
that offerings may come forth to him in] the Opening Day of the Year Feast, the Feast of Thoth, the Feast of the Year Feast, the $wjkp$-Feast, the monthly, $s\bar{w}d$-Feast, the Feast of the Coming forth of Min, the $\text{Wrb}$-Feast, the monthly Feast and the half-monthly Feast (to) the Inspector of the Court, the King's Relative, $\text{Hmwr}$.
THE MASTABA OF HMW AND SPSS-KJ.F’NH

At the end of the inscription the deceased is represented seated upon a stool, his left hand placed upon his chest.

The Lower Lintel

The lower lintel bears a horizontal inscription, reading: “The King’s Inspector of the Court, Hmw”.

The upper parts of both outer jambs are damaged. The inscription on the right-hand outer jamb reads: “The Priest of the Sun-temple of King Mw-kj.w-Hr, the King’s Relative, Hmw”.

The left outer jamb is inscribed: “The Priest of the Sun-temple of King Nj.wsr-R, Secretary . . .”.

On the right inner jamb is inscribed: “The King’s Relative, Inspector of the Court, Hmw”.

At the bottom, the deceased is represented in a walking attitude. He wears a short kilt with a triangular apron, and carries a long staff. The left inner jamb is inscribed: “Friend of the House, Inspector of the Court, Hmw”.

The Southern False-Door (Fig. 69, PI. XXXVII. A)

This false-door is also fashioned from local limestone. The lower lintel is lacking, with the exception of the extreme left-hand end, which bears a figure of the owner inscribed with his name: “Spss-kj.f’nh”.

The upper part of the panel is effaced, but on the lower part can be seen the legs of the deceased and part of the inscription giving his name. Note that he was represented in a standing attitude. This pose is extremely rare on a panel, where the deceased is usually shown seated before an offering-table (see “Excavations at Giza”, Vol. V, pp. 86, 144).

The lower lintel is inscribed with: “The King’s Relative, Spss-kj.f’nh”. The upper ends of both right and left outer jambs are effaced; on the former, the remainder of the inscription reads: “. . . that he may walk upon the good ways in peace, in peace, to the beautiful west . . . (Spss-kj.f’nh)”.

On the left outer jamb the inscription reads: “Priest of Khafra (?). Honoured by the Great God, Beloved by His Master, He who does what His Master Praises, the King’s Relative, Spss-kj.f’nh”.

On the right inner jamb is inscribed: “The King’s Relative, Overseer of the Ka-servants, Beloved by His Master, Spss-kj.f’nh.”
On the left inner jamb is inscribed: “The King’s Relative, the Steward, the Honoured One, Špsn-kf-nḥ”.

The Chapel.

The passage leads to a chapel measuring 2'90 × 2'50 m., in the middle of the western wall of which is a false-door (Fig. 70, Pl. XXXVI, A, C).

The Lintel of the False-Door

The lintel, broken into three pieces, was found lying within the chapel. It bears two horizontal rows of hieroglyphs, reading: “A boon which the King gives, and a boon which Anubis, Presiding over the Gods’s Dwelling (gives), that he may be buried in the Western Desert after a very good old age, the Honoured by the Great God. That offerings may come forth to him at the voice, at the Opening Day of the Year Feast, the Feast of Thoth, the First of the Year Feast, the Wsp-Feast, the Feast of Skr, the Great Feast, the Feast of Burning, the Wsp-h-Feast, the Feast of the Coming-forth of Min, the Monthly Feast of $Sdj$, the Feast of the Beginning of the Month, the Feast of the Beginning of the Half-Month, and the Feast of Every day, (to) the Friend of the House, the Secretary, Inspector of the Palace, King's Purificator, Priest of the Sun-temple of King $Mw-kj.r-Hr$, Inspector of the Court, Concerned with the Anointing Oils, $Hmw$.

At the end of the lintel, $Hmw$ is represented seated upon a chair. He holds a long staff in his left hand, and his right hand rests upon his lap with the fist closed.

The Right-hand Jamb

The right-hand jamb bears a vertical inscription, reading: “The Inspector of the Palace Priest of King $Nj-wsr-R'$, Honoured by His Master, $Hmw$.”

At the bottom of the jamb is a representation of the deceased in a walking attitude. He is clad in a short kilt with a triangular apron, and carries a long staff.

Below is a representation of $Hmw$ similar to that on the right-hand jamb.
The incised hieroglyphs of these inscriptions were originally coloured, faint traces of colouring still being found here and there among them. The part of the western wall of the chapel immediately to the north of the false-door is occupied by an offering-list, the upper part of which is damaged. (For a detailed discussion of the items enumerated in this list, see Part II of this work, p. 17.) To the right-hand side of the offering-list are five registers in relief, exhibiting various articles of food and drink offerings, which still retain traces of brilliant colouring.

To the south of the false-door two registers of sculpture and part of a third register are preserved. In the latter register all that remains are the legs of two men and the hoof of an ox. In front of the first pair of legs is inscribed " . . . a choice ox ". In the second register is depicted a scene of men bringing sacrificial animals to the tomb. The first man looks backwards over his shoulder to an oryx, which he grasps by a horn and the muzzle. In front of him is inscribed : " Presenting a young oryx ". Above the animal is inscribed : " A young oryx ".

Then follows a second man, who places one hand upon the rump of the oryx, while with the other he holds the halter of a fatted ox, above which is inscribed : " A young ox ".

The third register bears a similar scene. The first man leads a long-horned ox, above which is inscribed : " A young ox ". A second man follows behind, placing his left hand upon the rump of the ox, while with his right one he leads a gazelle, by means of a cord fastened around its neck. Above the animal is inscribed : " A young gazelle ".

Immediately behind the false-door lies a serdab, measuring 1.0 x 1.85 m. It contained nothing but wind-borne sand and some blocks of limestone.

THE MASTABA OF K3-DW1

Mastaba of Ka-dwa
No.10

Fig. 77
Title:

hmtntr Hr-Hr m is. m.t.s nb.t “Priestess of Hathor in all Her Places (i.e. of worship).”

Ka-servant:

Hsj.

SITUATION

This mastaba is situated to the north of that of ’nh-m-sj/, and west of that of Hmœ (see General Plan 7-N-O).

DESCRIPTION

The Mastaba of Kr-dw3 is built of fairly large blocks of limestone; eight courses of the masonry are still existing.

The Entrance

The main entrance measures 0·85 × 0·65 m. and opens south. The right thickness is missing, and on the left thickness a vertical row of well-cut hieroglyphs reads (Fig. 78, Pl. XXXVIII, B): “The Priest of Hr-wsr-ib, the Priest of Nbj-wsr-m, the Inspector of the Purificators, Kr-dw3”.

The threshold of the entrance is composed of a slab of limestone, measuring 0·26 × 2·28 m., against the left inner side, of which is the socket for the door pivot.

This entrance gives access to a long passage measuring 10·40 × 1·15 m., its eastern wall being formed by the western wall of the Mastaba of Hmœ.

False-Door of Hmœ

Almost at the northern end of the western wall of this passage is the false-door of Hmœ. It is made of white Turah limestone, and measures 0·98 m. wide. The upper part is destroyed, but four fragments of the upper lintel were found lying in the debris a little to the south-east. They are sculptured in relief and painted, and bear fragments of two horizontal rows of hieroglyphs, reading:

(1) “... gives, and a boon, which Anubis, Presiding Over the God’s Dwelling ... western desert, after a very good old age, (and that) he may walk upon the good ways, the Inspector of the Court ...”

(2) “... Opening Day of the Year Feast, the Feast of Thoth, the First of the Year Feast, the Wdy Feast ..., the Sdj Feast, the Feast of the Coming Forth of Min, the Wt-th Feast, the Monthly Feast, the Half-Monthly Feast ...”

At the end of this inscription may be seen the upper part of a figure of the deceased, seated before an offering-table. Above the table is inscribed: “Thousands of loaves of bread, cakes, jars of beer, and thousands of oxen and geese.”

The panel is mostly effaced, only the lower part of a figure of the deceased seated before an offering-table remains.
The tower lintel bears a horizontal row of hieroglyphs, reading: "The Inspector of the Court, the Friend of the House, the Secretary, Hmww ".

The right outer jamb bears the lower part of a vertical row of incised hieroglyphs, reading: "... Concerned with the Anointing Oil, the King's Adorner, Hmww ".

At the bottom is a representation of the deceased seated upon a stool, and holding a long staff in his right hand.

The left outer jamb bears the lower half of an incised inscription, reading: "... by His Lord, Hmww ".

At the bottom is a representation of the deceased similar to that on the right outer jamb.

The right inner jamb bears a vertical row of hieroglyphs, reading: "... King's Relative, the King's Purificator, Beloved by His Master, Hmww ".

At the bottom, the figure of the deceased is represented in a walking attitude, and holding a long staff.

The left inner jamb bears an incised inscription, reading: "The Inspector of the Court, the Friend of the House, the Priest of King Nj-wsr-R, Hmww ".

A representation of the deceased, similar to that upon the right inner jamb, appears at the bottom of this inscription.

The carving of this false-door is admirable, the details of the hieroglyphs being minutely rendered; on the other hand, the figures of the deceased appear to have been left unfinished.

The Chapel of Ki-dw3

Almost in the middle of the western wall of the passage is the entrance to the chapel. It opens eastwards, and measures 0.70 x 0.55 m.

The Lintel (Fig. 79, Pl. XXXVIII, A):--

(1) It is formed of white Turah limestone, and bears two horizontal rows of hieroglyphs, reading: "A boon which the King gives, and a boon which Anubis, Presiding Over the God's Dwelling (gives), a burial to him in the western desert after a very good old age, and that he may walk upon the good ways before the Great God ".

(2) "That offerings of bread, cake, beer, oxen, and geese may come forth to him in the Opening Day of the Year Feast, the Feast of Thoth, the First of the Year Feast, the Wy Feast, the Feast of Skr, the Great Feast, the Feast of Fire, the Feast of the Coming Forth of Min, the Monthly Feast, the Sb Feast, the Wb-bh Feast, the Feast of the Beginning of the Month, the Feast of the beginning of the Half Month, and every feast, and every day, (to) the King's Relative, the Steward, the Ka-servant, Ki-dw3 ".

At the end is a representation of the deceased seated upon a stool, and holding a long staff in his left hand.
The Drum (Fig. 79, Pl. XXXIX, B)

The drum, which was found broken into two pieces, is incised with a horizontal row of hieroglyphs, reading: "The King’s Relative, the King’s Purificator, the Priest of King Khafra’, K3-dw3".

The right outer thickness is lacking.

It is divided into three registers, in the first of which is a representation of K3-dw3 in a walking attitude. He wears a short wig, finely dressed in rows of curls, and a short kilt with a triangular apron. He holds a long staff in his right hand and a handkerchief in his left hand. Above his head are two horizontal rows of hieroglyphs, reading: "The King’s Relative, the Steward, K3-dw3".

Behind him stands his wife. Her right hand rests upon her breast, and her left arm hangs at her side. She wears a long wig, a long, tight robe, a “dog-collar” necklace, and wide bracelets. Above her head is inscribed: “The King’s Relative, his wife, Nfr-rs”.

In the second register are the figures of two men, each of whom wears a short, curled wig, and a short kilt with a triangular apron. They are in a walking attitude and their arms hang at their sides. In front of the first figures is inscribed: “His Eldest son, the Judge, and Scribe, nh-wd-s”.

In front of the second figure is inscribed: “His son the Judge, and Scribe, Hmwt”.

In the third register are three figures of men, similar to the above. In front of the first man is inscribed: “His son, Pth-šps”. The second man is labelled: “His son, Nfr-Mf’t”. The third figure is inscribed: “The Ka-servant, Ḫeṣj.”
The Left Inner Thickness (Pl. XXXIII, C)

On the left inner thickness is preserved the lower part of a figure of a man, presumably the deceased. He was represented in a walking attitude, and holding a long staff in his left hand and a handkerchief in his right hand. He wears a short kilt with a pleated side wrap. In front of him at a somewhat higher level than his feet is a small figure of a woman. She wears a long, tight robe; her right arm hangs at her side, while the left hand rests upon her breast. The head and shoulders are lacking. In front of her is incised: "Nj-kr-Nbtj".

The door of the chapel was composed of one leaf, and opened inwards, as can be proved from the socket made for the door pivot.

The actual chapel measures 4'15 x 1'40 m.

The North Wall (Fig. 80, Pl. XLI)

At the top of the centre part of the wall are two superposed registers, mostly effaced. On the upper register is the representation of a cow, and behind her a kneeling man, apparently assisting her in the delivery of a calf (1). On the lower register are two bulls and traces of an inscription above their backs.

On the left side of this wall is the upper part of a scene representing a papyrus thicket: The head of the deceased, together with the right forearm, the hand clasping a fishing spear. Two ichneumons are shown climbing upon bending papyrus stalks, intent upon robbing some bird's nests.

The masonry of the middle part of the wall is lacking.

(1) See "Deir el-Gabaraui", II, Pl. 19; and KLEBS, "Die Reliefs", p. 62.
At the bottom of the wall are two registers, the left-hand parts of which are fairly well preserved. In the upper register is a man seated upon the ground, his back supported by a triangular object, his right leg is stretched out before him, and his left leg is drawn up; he holds some object, now effaced in his left, outstretched hand, and his right hand rests upon his left knee. This is followed by a group of bakers. The first man kneels upon the ground before a large jar which he tilts towards him. In front of him another man is fashioning a circular loaf from dough contained in a large bowl beside him. Between these two men is a circular oven in which are seven loaves in the process of baking. The flames can be seen issuing out of the sides of the oven. They are followed by a man roasting a goose on a spit over a charcoal brazier; the embers are kept at glowing heat by means of a fan. Last of all is a man leaning back, with his knees drawn up in front of him. He is apparently overcome by the heat of the oven, and a boy is giving him a drink from a shallow bowl.

In the bottom register, on the right, is a man coaxing a calf to eat from his hand. This is followed by a group of two men, kneeling upon the ground, and apparently engaged in polishing a tablet of stone (?). At the end is a figure of a man, apparently engaged in putting the final touches to a low stand.

At a distance of about 0.45 m. from the northern and southern ends of the western wall are two false-doors, each fashioned from a monolithic slab of local limestone.
The Northern False-Door (Fig. 81, Pl. XLII, A, B)

It measures 0.90 m. wide, and the upper part is entirely destroyed.

On the right outer jamb is a vertical row of incised hieroglyphs, reading: "... that offerings of bread cake and beer may come forth to him at the Opening Day of the Year Feast, the Feast of Thoth, the First of the Year Feast, the $\text{W}_3\text{g}$ Feast, $\text{K}_3\text{dw}_3$".

The left outer jamb bears the following incised inscription: "The Steward, the Honoured by the Great God, $\text{K}_3\text{dw}_3$".

The right inner jamb bears a vertical inscription, reading: "The King’s Purificator, the Priest of Khafra’, the King’s Relative, $\text{K}_3\text{dw}_3$".

The left inner jamb is incised with: "The King’s Relative, the Steward, the Eldest of the Portal or Forecourt, the Honoured One, $\text{K}_3\text{dw}_3$".

At the bottom of each jamb is a representation of the deceased in a walking attitude. He wears a long plaited wig, a false beard and a short kilt with a triangular apron. He holds a long staff in one hand and a handkerchief in the other. His flesh is coloured dark red, the necklace blue, the kilt white, and the hair and beard black.

The Southern False-Door (Fig. 81, Pl. XLIII, A, B)

The upper part is entirely effaced, and the lower lintel is mostly weathered away, although the signs $\text{W}_2\text{ }\text{W}_3\text{g}$ "... the Steward, $\text{K}_3\text{dw}_3$" may still be recognized.

The tops of the outer jambs are destroyed, but the remaining parts each bear an identical inscription, reading: "... the Steward, the Honoured by the Great God, $\text{K}_3\text{dw}_3$".

The right inner jamb is inscribed: "The King’s Relative, the Steward, the Eldest of the Portal the Honoured One, $\text{K}_3\text{dw}_3$".

The left inner jamb bears the following inscription: The King’s Purificator, the Priest of Khafra’, the King’s Relative, $\text{K}_3\text{dw}_3$”.

At the bottom of each jamb, the deceased is represented in a walking attitude. He wears a long, plaited wig, a false beard, a broad necklace, and a short kilt with a triangular apron. He holds a long staff in one hand, and the $\text{hrp}$ baton in the other. The figures and hieroglyphs bear traces of colouring, similar to that seen on the northern false-door.

To the right side of the northern false-door is a representation of the deceased in a walking attitude. He wears a long, plaited wig, and a short kilt with a plaited side-wrap; he carries a long staff in his right hand, and a handkerchief in his left one. Above his head is inscribed: "The King’s Relative, $\text{K}_3\text{dw}_3$".

Below this are the figures of two male offering-bearers, represented on a smaller scale. The first man carries a live duck in his left hand, and the burden of his companion is effaced, but appears to have been a bird of some description. The top of the space lying between the two false-doors is occupied by the remains of an offering list, now consisting of three rows of incised hieroglyphs containing fifty-one entries, but the remainder of the list, which extended further down the wall, is destroyed. To the left of this offering-list are the tops of three vertical rows of hieroglyphs which read:

(1) “A boon which the King gives, (and a boon which) Anubis . . . ”
(2) “... that there be made to him offerings of bread, cake, and beer . . . ”
(3) “... For ever, to the Honoured One . . . ”
Below the offering-list was an offering-scene, only the lower part of which remains. In it, the deceased is represented seated upon a bovine-legged chair; his left hand is extended to a low offering-table set upon a stand before him. He is clad in a sacerdotal leopard’s skin.

Below the table is inscribed: “Thousands of loaves of bread, cakes, and jars of beer; thousands of alabaster offering-tables and all garments”.

To the right of the table is a heap of food offerings, including fowls, and joints of meat. To the right of the whole scene are three superposed registers, the two upper ones of which depict an array of various kinds of food and drink offerings. In the third register are the figures of six men engaged in performing a funerary ritual.

The first man stands with his back to the deceased; he carries a broom with which to smoothe the sanded floor after the ceremonies are finished (1). Then follows a kneeling man who places a small stand on the ground before him; while behind him stands a man who holds a smoking censer in both hands. He is followed by a group of two men, one of whom kneels on the ground, holding a basin in his outstretched hands, into which the other man, who stands behind, is pouring water. Finally, comes a man who seems to be the Master of the Ceremonies; he stands with his right hand outstretched in an attitude of declamation, and in front of him is inscribed: “Presenting Offerings”.

Below is a representation of a man in a walking attitude. He wears a curled wig and a short kilt, and carries a duck in each hand.

In front of him is inscribed: “His son, Hmnu”.

The Southern Wall (Fig. 82, Pl. XLVI)

On the right-hand side of this wall is a large figure of the deceased. He is represented in a walking attitude, and carries a long staff in his right hand. His head is covered with a short, curled wig, and he wears a false beard, a broad necklace, and a short kilt, with a triangular apron. Above his head are inscribed five vertical rows of hieroglyphs, reading: “Inspecting the offerings (by) the King’s Relative, the Priest and Purificator of Khafra’, the Inspector of the Purificators, the Secretary, the Eldest of the Portal of the Pyramid Called ‘Khafra’ is Great’, the Honoured One Ki-dw3”.

To the left of this scene, but forming a part of it, are seven superposed registers, the upper three of which are occupied by representations of different varieties of birds, some of which have their names inscribed above them (2). The right-hand side of the upper register is interrupted by the presence of an aperture, 0.35 m. wide, designed to admit light into the chapel. The lower part of the third register is entirely destroyed, but in its right-hand extremity can be seen a figure.

(2) For these birds in the offering-list, see Part II, p. 365, ff.
of a man in a standing attitude. His left hand is placed upon his right shoulder in a gesture of respect to the owner of the tomb, and he is represented on a scale so small as to appear ridiculous when compared with the birds he is supposed to be in charge of.

In the fourth register is a man, in a similar attitude to the above, leading an ox. He wears a typical peasant's kilt, fashioned from a fabric made of woven straw (1). The remaining part of this register is destroyed.

A similar scene is represented in the fifth register but it is in a somewhat better state of preservation. Above the back of the animal is inscribed: "A young (ox)".

Behind it can be seen the legs of another ox, and the rest of the animal is effaced.

The sixth register is in an excellent state of preservation, and depicts the "Overseer of the Stalls" leading a "young ibex", as the inscription above the animal states. Behind the man is inscribed: "To the beloved Ka".

This group is followed by "a young gazelle" suckling her fawn.

The seventh register is in the same good state of preservation, and extends the whole length of the wall. In it are depicted two men leading two "young oryx" which they grasp firmly by horns and muzzle. In front of the face of the second man is inscribed: "Bringing the choice items of the offerings".

They are followed by two men, who are conducting "a young hyena", an animal which was apparently artificially fattened, and eaten by the Egyptians (2). The refractory nature of the animal is expressed by the fact that it requires two attendants, one of whom leads it by means of a rope attached to a wide collar around its neck, while the other pushes it, somewhat timidly, from behind.

It is to be noted that the man leading the ox in the fifth register, as well as all the men in the seventh register, are represented wearing curled wigs, the remainder having apparently only their natural short hair. By this we may perhaps assume that the former were the Ka-servants of the deceased, it being inconceivable that mere herdsmen would have the means of providing themselves with such wigs.

The Eastern Wall (Fig. 83, Pls. XLVII, XLVIII, XLIX, L)

At the southern end of this wall the deceased is represented seated upon a bovine-legged chair; he wears a short wig (perhaps his natural hair cut short), and a false beard, and holds a fly-switch in his left hand. This article presents a very pleasant and artistic appearance, the handle being carved to represent a human arm terminating in a hand, which holds the switch. In his right hand he holds a lotus-flower. Above his head are inscribed six vertical rows of hieroglyphs, reading: "The Priest of Hr-war-ib, the Inspector of the Purificators, the Secretary, the Priest of Nbtj-war-m, the Priest and Purificator of Khafra', the Eldest of the Portal of the Pyramid Called 'Khafra is Great', the Steward, K3-dw3".

(1) See Blackman, "Rock Tombs of Meir", Vol. III.
(2) See Klats, "Die Reliefs der Alten Reiche", p. 64, Abb. 32.
To the left-hand side are six superposed registers, the greater part of which is destroyed. The upper three appear to have borne representations of food and drink offerings, and an artistically executed bouquet of flowers is placed upon a stand in front of the owner of the tomb.

The fifth register is headed by the figure of a woman, depicted on a fairly large scale. She wears a long, closely-fitting garment, and smells a lotus-flower. Above her head is inscribed: "The King’s Relative, his wife, who is beloved by him, the Honoured One Nbtj. Behind her are represented three male offering-bearers, who are followed in turn by a group of butchers engaged in the dismemberment of three oxen. The upper part of this register is destroyed.

The sixth register is complete, and is wholly devoted to a representation of a concert. At the right-hand side, these girls, wearing long, tight garments, are represented clapping their hands. Above their heads a horizontal inscription reads: "Beating time for dancing, by the harem.”

In front of them are six dancers clad in short tunics, their hands raised, palms upward, above their heads, with the finger-tips meeting, in the same manner as the modern Egyptian dancers. They are headed by a naked acrobat, who is about to turn a back somersault.

Next in order are two harpists facing each other, and between them, two male singers. The first harp is provided with nine strings, and the second with eleven. In front of the first harpist is inscribed: “Striking the harp”.

Above the head of the singer is inscribed: “Singing to the harp.”
The northern end of the register is divided into two superposed registers, in each of which is represented two singers accompanied by two flutists. It is to be noted that the former are shown with one hand placed over their ears in the manner of the modern Egyptian singers. In front of each is inscribed: "Singing".

At the top of the wall, immediately to the left side of the inscriptions above the head of the deceased, is an aperture measuring 0.35 × 0.15 m., made in order to admit light into the chapel.

The Serdab

The serdab is situated immediately to the north of the Chapel of K3-diw3, and to the west of the false-door; it measures 3.70 × 1.05 m., and the upper courses of the masonry are destroyed. It was found to have been occupied by a later burial-chamber, the aperture of which opened to the south. It contained a skeleton, which was damaged by the collapse of the roof. To the right of the roofing slabs, and against the eastern wall of the serdab, lay a fine statuette of K3-diw3, buried in the debris. It was probably placed here by the intruders who used the serdab as a burial-place. The squint of the serdab, if there was one, must have been situated in one of the stones of the middle courses of the northern wall of the chapel, which are now entirely lacking; in this case, the original place of the statuette would be standing against the northern wall of the serdab.

The Statuette of K3-diw3 (Pls. LI, LII):

Material.—White limestone, painted.

Dimensions.—Height: 1.8 m. Breadth across the shoulders: 0.31 m.

Preservation.—Very good.

Workmanship.—Excellent work, skilfully modelled and highly finished, but strictly conventional in outlook.

Subject.—It represents the owner of the tomb in a walking attitude, the left leg advanced and the arms hanging by the sides, with the hands closed. He wears a short curled wig and a short, pleated kilt, the triangular apron of which has the pleating running diagonally. This garment is upheld by an ornamental belt fastened around the hips. The face is very finely modelled, and bears a pleasant, good-humoured expression, moreover the features closely resemble the relief portraits of K3-diw3. On the upper surface of the pedestal is inscribed: "The King's Relative, K3-diw3".

Colouring.—Hair, eyes, and eyebrows, black; flesh, reddish brown; kilt white; girdle, red and blue.

Both the statuette of K3-diw3 and the scenes represented on the walls and doorway of the tomb, display an artistic technique of a very high order, although the latter adhere strictly to convention, both in style and subject-matter. The scenes, however, present a pleasing appearance owing to the skilful grouping of the figures and the patient attention to details. One would imagine that they were executed by an artist who was well-trained, skilful, and patient, but who lacked the spark of genius which illuminates the work of the man who decorated the Mastaba of Tesen (1).

Burial: A badly damaged skeleton.

Inscribed Limestone Slabs

The following slabs of inscribed limestone undoubtedly belong to the Mastaba of K3-dw3, but their original positions are uncertain. They are as follows:

(1) A slab found in front of the doorway of the Chapel of K3-dw3. It is sculptured in bas-relief with a figure of the man, Hmw, represented in a standing attitude. He holds a long staff in his left hand, and a handkerchief in the right one. In front of him is inscribed:

\text{"The Inspector of the Court, the Friend of the House, the Secretary, Hmw".}

Beside him is a representation of his wife with her left hand resting upon his shoulder. Behind her is inscribed:

\text{"His wife, the King’s Relative, the Priestess of Hathor, Nb-htp".}

Many traces of the original colours still remain upon this scene.

(2) A limestone door-jamb, broken into five pieces from a later burial pit; the fifth fragment was recovered from a later burial, constructed to the west of the second pillar in the Chapel of Sub-wt-ht. The complete jamb bears the following inscription:

\text{"The Priest of Hr-wsr-ib, the Priest of Nb-tj-wsr-m, the Inspector of the Purificators, K3-dw3".}
THE MASTABA OF KI-KJ'-NH

SITUATION

This mastaba is situated to the north-west of that of In-ki.f, the Priest, and to the north-east of that of Nj'-nh-Hnumu (see General Plan 7-P).

DESCRIPTION

The Entrance

The doorway of the mastaba opens east, and is reached through a large forecourt lying in front of the Mastaba of In-ki.f, and to the west of Sûm-nfr.

Apparently this forecourt belongs to the Mastaba of Ki-kij'-nh, as the following points seem to indicate:

1. The west wall of the Mastaba of Sûm-nfr, an earlier construction than that of In-ki.f, has been used to form the eastern wall of the court.
2. The northern wall of the forecourt is built right up to the end of the eastern wall of the Chapel of Ki-kij'-nh.

The upper part of the doorway of the chapel is damaged, but a large block of limestone incised with large, deeply cut hieroglyphs was found lying to the north of the chapel. This block, which may have formed part of the lintel, bears the following inscription: "... Ki-kij'-nh" (Pl. LIII, B).

The Right-Door Thickness (Fig. 95)

The surface of the stone has so flaked away that only the faint outlines of an ox and its driver can be distinguished.

The surface of the left thickness has entirely weathered away.

The Chapel

The entrance gives access to a small chapel measuring 2.85×1.90 m. It is built of local limestone masonry, but of such a poor quality stone that most of the sculptured scenes which once covered the walls have entirely flaked away, only a few traces, some of which bear faint colouring, remain.
EXCAVATIONS AT GIZA, 1934-1935

Mastaba of Ka-kay'ankh
No. II

Fawzy Ibrahim

Fig. 96
The East Wall (Fig. 97)

At the left-hand side of the doorway are two superposed registers, the upper one of which is so defaced that all that can be traced of the scene it contained are the feet of a large group of a man and a woman. Before the man's feet, and holding the lower part of a long staff, is the naked figure of a child. Facing the child was a figure of a man, only the lower part of the kilt and the legs of which still remain.

In the lower register is the representation of a procession of five men bearing various articles of the personal property of the deceased. In front of each man was an incised inscription giving his name, but which are now barely legible.

On the right side of the doorway are also two superposed registers (Fig. 98, Pl. LIV, B).

The upper one bears only faint traces of two oxen and their drivers, facing north.

The lower register is much better preserved, and bears the representation of two fatted oxen, and two herdsmen. The first ox wears an ornamental collar around its neck, and is led by a man, who places his right hand on his left shoulder in a gesture of respect. Above the man is inscribed : "The Kerservant, Mr".

Behind the animal is another man, placing his right hand upon its hind quarters. Before his face is inscribed : "Idw".
The second ox, which has deformed and ingrowing horns (1), wears a halter, and is tethered to a peg (?) in the ground.

The North Wall (Fig. 99, Pl. LIV, A)

The northern wall also bears the remains of two superposed registers, the upper one of which is badly damaged. It apparently once bore a large representation of the deceased and his wife seated facing each other on bovine-legged chairs, and four small figures of musicians seated upon the ground between them.

The lower register is much better preserved. The right-hand side is subdivided into two narrow registers, each of which seems to have contained the figures of two men, seated facing each other upon the ground. These figures appear to represent musicians and singers. They are followed by a row of six dancers. Their hands are raised above their heads with the finger-tips meeting, and their left legs are advanced, with the feet slightly raised from the ground. This movement being still employed by the modern Egyptians in their dances. Behind these performers, is a naked acrobat, about to throw a back somersault (2). At the left of the register are three girls clapping their hands to mark the rhythm of the dance, and singing.

(2) A similar performer occurs in the Tomb of K1-ja1. See p. 105 of the present volume.
The West Wall

It is in a very bad state of preservation. Forty-five centimetres from the southern end of this wall was a false-door, painted dark red, perhaps in imitation of granite, and measuring 0.70 m. wide. Before it is a low platform cut from the rock of the floor, and measuring 1.60 × 0.55 m., and having a depression in its centre for the reception of an offering-table.

On the left side of the false-door is a vertical squint measuring 0.10 × 0.60 m., and belonging to a large serdab lying behind the western wall of the chapel. This serdab measures 3.55 × 1.10 m., but was found plundered.

Below this squint is part of an incised offering-list (Fig. 100, Pl. LIII, D).

On the right side of the false-door are the remains of three superposed registers (1). The two upper registers at the right-hand side show an array of food and drink offerings, laden offering-tables, and tall jars in ring-stands. The bottom register shows a group of six butchers engaged in dismembering two sacrificial oxen. Above the second man in the group is inscribed:

\[ \text{"Taking out the heart and presenting the choicest pieces".} \]

Above the right-hand ox is a horizontal row of hieroglyphs, reading: "Sharpening the knife".

(1) Fig. 100, Pl. LIII, A, C.
In the left-hand side of the bottom register are parts of two figures of men, each of whom is carrying live ducks. Above the first man is inscribed: ▫ ▫ ▫ ▫ ▫ ▫.

At the extreme northern end of the west wall may be seen very faint traces of a coloured border. The surface of the southern wall is entirely defaced. A doorway measuring 0.60 × 0.65 × 2.25 m. high opens in its western side, into a long passage measuring 6.30 × 1.20 m. long. In the middle of its western wall is another doorway measuring 0.60 × 0.55 m. wide, and leading to an uninscribed mastaba lying between that of Ki-hij-'nh and Ruij-k1 and In-k1.f the Sculptor (see General Plan 7-O, 7-P).

THE MASTABA OF IN-K.\%F THE PRIEST

TITLES

1. (\(\text{hm.mtr Hj.f-R'}\) "Priest of Khafra’").
2. (\(\text{shd w'bw}\) “Inspector of the Purificators”.
3. (\(\text{mrr-nb.f}\) “Loved by His Master”.
4. (\(\text{rh njswt}\) “King’s Relative”.
5. (\(\text{im3kwe}\) “The Honoured One”.
6. (\(\text{krj sštj nb.f}\) “Secretary of His Master”.

SITUATION

This mastaba is situated to the east of that of R\(\text{wk-hj}\) and In-\(\text{k.j}\) the Sculptor, and a little to the west of that of Queen R\(\text{bk.t-R’}\) (see General Plan 7, 8-P).

DESCRIPTION

The mastaba is entirely built of medium-sized blocks of local limestone.

The Entrance

The doorway opens northwards and measures 0'90 x 1'20 x 2'00 m. high.

The Lintel (Fig. 104, Pl. LV A)

The surface of this lintel has greatly weathered away. It bears a single row of large incised hieroglyphs, reading: “The Priest of King Khafra’, the Inspector of the Purificators, the Loved of His Master, In-\(\text{k.j}\)”.

Fig. 104

The door thicknesses are in a very bad state of preservation, the surface of the stone having almost entirely flaked away.
Mastaba of Rwd-ka & In-Ka-ef No. 13

The Right Thickness (Fig. 106)

Only the head of a large figure of a man is preserved. He wears a short wig and a false beard and above his head and in front of his face, two horizontal rows of hieroglyphs, reading:

1. "The Priest of (King Khafra'), the King's Relative, the Inspector of the Purification, the Honoured One, In-ki.f."

2. "The Priest of (King Khafra'), In-ki.f."

It also bears faint traces of the head of a large figure of a man, and the remains of two horizontal rows of hieroglyphs, reading:

1. "... The Priest of (Khafra' ?), Secretary of His Master, In-ki.f."

2. "... the Priest of ... , In-ki.f."

This entrance was apparently closed by a wooden door, the upper and lower sockets of which are still visible on the left-hand side of the doorway. In the right inner thickness there is a hole for the reception of the bolt.

This entrance leads to a rectangular hall measuring 5.20 × 2.70 m., the roof of which was supported upon two rectangular pillars measuring 0.45 × 0.40 × 1.60 m. high. In the northern part of the western wall is the lower part of an uninscribed false-door, constructed of small blocks of white limestone.

The east wall was apparently covered with sculptured scenes, which have almost entirely flaked away. A few very faint traces of the figures of men and oxen can be discerned here and there.

One block of masonry has been removed or omitted from the northern wall in order to form a shelf measuring 0.90 × 0.40 m., and situated at a height of 1.00 m. from the floor of the chapel.
At the western end of the south wall is another doorway 0·85 × 0·75 m. wide, giving access to a long passage running north-south, and measuring 8·00 × 1·10 m.

In the northern part of the western wall of this passage is another uninscribed false-door built of small blocks of white limestone. Its upper part is damaged. In front of this false-door, and lying behind the eastern wall of the passage, is a serdab measuring 1·00 × 1·10 m., its squint being situated to face the false-door, and at a height of 1·20 m. from the floor of the passage. It was found empty.

This passage ends in a small rectangular chapel measuring 1·70 × 1·40 m. behind the southern wall of which is a ruined serdab, measuring 0·55 × 1·00 m. This serdab contains a group of white limestone statuettes of a man, most probably they represent a dual portrait of the owner of the tomb (Pl. LV, B). They each represent a man in a walking attitude, with the left leg advanced and the arms hanging by the sides with the hands closed upon the unknown object. They wear stiff, knee-length kilts. Maximum height of the group 1·30 m.; maximum breadth 0·95 × 0·60 m.

In the western wall of the chapel are the remains of another false-door, a fragment of which was found in the debris filling the chapel. It bears the following inscription: "... (before) His Lord, In-ka-f."

4. Ṣḥḥ-st-mrj.

Situation

This mastaba is situated to the north-east of that of Shm-kij, and to the west of that of In-kj.f, the Priest (see General Plan 7, 8-O-P).

Description

The mastaba is wholly constructed of medium-sized blocks of local limestone, and its main entrance appears to have been on the north. In the eastern wall of the corridor-chapel are two false-doors, each constructed of white Turah limestone.

The Southern False-Door (Fig. 118, Pl. LVI, B)

Its upper lintel had been broken into two pieces and re-employed in the construction of a later burial which lay a little to the south of the northern false-door, but has now been restored to its original place. It is inscribed with large, deeply cut hieroglyphs. reading (Fig. 117, Pl. LVI, A):

"The Priest of Khafra", the King's Relative, the Honoured One, Rwd-ki (and) his son, the Sculptor of the Wb-h.t-house, In-kj.f".

The panel and the lower lintel are composed of one slab of stone, the upper part of which is damaged.

The Panel

This bears the lower part of a relief representing the deceased seated before an offering-table. On each side of the panel were originally two superposed registers, in which were depicted numbers of the family of the deceased. On the right-hand side the upper register is almost entirely effaced. The lower register bears a seated figure of a man, most of which has disappeared and traces of his name remains. To the left of this figure was originally the representation of a woman, the name of whom, \textit{Wn-hr-\textit{id}.t} remains. As this name coincides with that of the wife of \textit{In-k\textit{f}}, the son of Re\textit{d-k\textit{a}}, it is very probable that the latter married his sister, a usual custom in ancient Egypt.

On the left-hand side of the panel can be seen the lower part of the figure of \textit{In-k\textit{f}}, in front of which is inscribed his name and part of a title. The upper register, which must have been a very narrow one, is entirely obliterated.

\textit{The Lower Lintel}

The lower lintel bears a horizontal row of hieroglyphs, reading: "The Priest of Khafra', the Inspector of the Purificators, the Honoured by the Great God, the King's Relative, \textit{Re\textit{d-k\textit{a}}}".

\textit{The Drum}

The drum bears a horizontal row of hieroglyphs, reading: "The King's Relative \textit{Re\textit{d-k\textit{a}}}".

\textit{The Northern False-Door (Fig. 119, Pl. LVII, B)}

The sculpture on this false-door is particularly well and carefully executed. The hieroglyphic signs are each miniature studies in themselves; note, for example, the figure of the man in "Old age" on the lower lintel. Perhaps this false-door was the work of \textit{In-k\textit{f}} himself.

\textit{The Upper Lintel}

The upper lintel was found buried in the debris in front of the false-door, but has now been restored to its original place. It is incised with two horizontal rows of hieroglyphs, reading: "A boon which the King gives, and a boon, which Anubis, who Presides Over the God's Dwelling (gives), a burial on the Western Desert after a very good old age before God; (and) that offerings of bread, cake, and beer may come forth to him in the Opening Day of the Year Feast, the first of the Year Feast, the Feast of Thoth, the \textit{Wig} Feast, and every feast and every day, \textit{to} the Sculptor of the \textit{W\textit{\text{\text{'}}}}.h-house, \textit{In-k\textit{f}}}".
Many traces of dark blue colour still remain in the hieroglyphs.

At the end of the inscription is a representation of the deceased and his wife seated together upon one stool. Behind the figure of the lady is a vertical row of hieroglyphs, reading: "His wife, (loved) by him, the Priestess of Hathor, Wn-hr-ih!".

The Panel

The panel bears a well-preserved scene representing the deceased and his wife seated facing each other across a table of offerings, which is set between them. The scene is well carved in relief, and full of minute detail.
In-ka.f is represented as wearing a curled wig, a wide necklace, and a short kilt with a pleated side-wrap. Above and in front of him is inscribed: "The Adorner of the King, the Honoured One, the Sculptor, In-ka.f".

The lady wears a long, plaited wig, a wide necklace, and anklets, and is clad in a long, tight robe suspended by braces over the shoulder. Above and in front of her is inscribed: "His wife, loved by him, Wn-hr-Inkt".

Below the table is inscribed: "Thousands of alabaster, thousands of loaves of bread, thousands of cakes, thousands of geese, thousands of jars of beer, thousands of oxen".

To the right-hand side of the panel are two superposed registers, in each of which are two figures representing children of the deceased. The upper register shows two seated men, above the first of whom is inscribed: "His son, Sps-Pth".

To the left-hand side of the panel are two similar registers, the upper one of which bears a representation of two more sons of In-ka.f. The first figure is inscribed: "His son, Rjd,kt-jrtj".

The lower register contains the figures of two other daughters of In-ka.f, who are inscribed: "His daughter, Hnw-t" and "His daughter, Nb-htp" respectively.

The Lower Lintel

It bears a horizontal row of hieroglyphs, reading: "A (boon) which the King gives, and a boon, which Anubis, who Presides Over the God's Dwelling (gives) a burial, after a good old age (to) the Adorner of the King, the Sculptor, In-ka.f".

The Drum

The drum bears a horizontal inscription, reading: "The Adorner of the King, the Sculptor, In-ka.f".

The Jambs

The right and left jambs were originally inscribed with an extensive offering-list, but the surface of the left jamb has almost entirely flaked away. The right jamb still retains thirty-five entries, more or less complete, and relating to such items as beer, trussed geese, haunches of beef fowl, etc. (2).

At the bottom of the false-door, between the two jambs is a libation basin of white limestone, on the outer side of which is inscribed: "The Adorner of the King, the Sculptor, In-ka.f".

1) These are Nos. 2-5 of the private canonical offering-list (see Part II of this work, p. 241, ff.).
2) For a detailed treatment of these items, see Part II.
THE MASTABA OF RWD-KJ AND IN-KJ F

In front of the false-door was a large, circular offering-table, part of which still remains in situ, while most of its remaining fragments were recovered from a later burial constructed a little to the south of it (Pl. LVII, A). It bears an incised offering-list, but is inscribed with the name of Kij kij-'nh (see for this Part II, p. 124, Pls. XXXIII, XL).

Shafts

Shaft No. 1304 (Fig. 120)

Grave-pit: 1·5 × 1·10 × 4·35 m.; partly built of rubble and partly rock-hewn; filling of limestone debris; side-chamber on the west.

Burial: A skeleton extended along the western wall, with the head to the north.

Shaft No. 1305 (Fig. 121)

Grave-pit: 1·0 × 1·05 × 4·52 m.; partly built of rubble and partly rock-hewn; filling of debris; side-chamber on the south; unfinished depression cut in the floor; fragments of a sarcophagus cover.

Burial: A skeleton extended on the floor to the south of the depression; head to the east.

Shaft No. 1306 (Fig. 122)

Grave-pit: 1·0 × 1·0 × 2·35 m.; roughly built of rubble; filling of limestone debris; no side-chamber.
Shaft No. 1307 (Fig. 123)

Grave-pit: 1.20 × 1.25 × 5.70 m.; partly built of blocks of limestone; and partly rock-hewn; filling of debris; side-chamber on the north, aperture open.

Burial: A damaged skeleton.

Shaft No. 1310 (Fig. 124)

Grave-pit: 1.30 × 1.30 × 8.15 m.; partly built of rubble, and partly rock-hewn; filling of limestone debris; side-chamber on the south; aperture open.

Burial: A skeleton extended on its back, with the head to the north. It lay upon the debris which almost filled the chamber; no trace of the original burial remained.

Fig. 125
THE MASTABA OF NJ-\textit{NH-HNMMW}

\section*{DESCRIPTION}

The Mastaba of \textit{Nj-\textit{nh-Hnmmw}} is wholly built of large blocks of local limestone, the upper courses of which are damaged. The main entrance faces north, and opens into the road leading to the tunnel cut under the causeway of the Second Pyramid. The upper part of this doorway is ruined, and the remaining portions of the jambs are each composed of a single slab of local limestone.

The Lintel (Fig. 126, Pl. LVIII, A)

The lintel is in a very bad state of preservation, and was found to have been torn from its place and thrown inside the chapel. It is incised with a horizontal row of hieroglyphs, reading: "King's Relative of the Court, Guardian of the King's Golden Ornaments of the Court, Inspector of the Nubians".

The Right Jamb (Fig. 126, Pl. LVIII, B)

On the right-hand jamb is a vertical row of hieroglyphs, reading: "... the Overseer of the Commissions of the Court, the Inspector of the Negroes, Guardian of the Golden Ornaments, the Honoured One Before the Great God, Nj-'nh-Hymn".

This inscription is duplicated on the left-hand jamb (Pl. LVIII, C), except for the third title, which here reads: "Guardian of the Golden Ornaments of the King".

The Right-Hand Thickness (Fig. 127, Pl. LIX, A)

The right-hand thickness bears a large representation of the deceased, sculptured in bas-relief. He is represented in a walking attitude, and is clad in a short kilt with a triangular apron. He carries a long staff in his left hand, and a handkerchief in his right one. The head and neck are lacking. In front of the deceased is a miniature figure of his son, who grasps the lower end of his father's staff. Above his head is inscribed: "His son, H3.t-nfr ...".

Below this group is a narrow register in which are depicted the figures of four men, all of whom are represented in a walking attitude; their left hands placed closed upon their breasts and their right arms hanging by their sides. They are probably sons of the deceased.

This doorway gives access to a rectangular chapel, measuring 4.80 x 1.0 m. in the western wall, of which are two false-doors.
The Northern False-Door (Fig. 129, Pl. LX, D)

It is composed of a monolithic slab of white limestone, but unfortunately its upper part is damaged.

The Lintel

This bears the inscription: "King's Relative of the court, Master of the secrets of . . . (Secretary of . . .) . . . King's Relative, Nj-'nh-Hnmw".

The Drum

The Right-Hand Jamb

The right-hand jamb bears three superposed registers, in the upper one of which is a figure of the owner of the tomb, who is represented in a walking attitude, one hand placed upon his breast and the other hanging at his side. Above his head is a vertical row of hieroglyphs, reading: "King's Relative, the King's Purificator, the Overseer of the Commissions of the Great House, Nj-'nh-Hnmw".

The middle register contains the figure of a woman. She is represented in a standing attitude and has one hand placed open upon her breast, while the other hand hangs at her side. In front of her is a vertical inscription, reading: "His wife beloved by him, King's Relative, Nb-htp".

The bottom register contains the figures of a man and a woman, each of whom is in a standing posture as described above. Over the head of the man is inscribed: "His son, Kj-ir".

The Southern False-Door (Fig. 130, Pl. LX, A, B, C)

This false-door is composed of local limestone, and its upper part is destroyed, with the exception of the left-hand side of the upper lintel, which was found thrown aside in the debris filling the chapel. It bears traces of an inscription, the remains of which read (Pl. LX, C): "... a burial in the (western ?) desert... that offerings of bread and beer may come forth in the (Opening) Day of the Year Feast, ... that Feast of Thoth (?), the First of the Year Feast, (and) every feast... the Inspector of the Nubians... the Honoured One, Nj'-nh-Hume".

At the end of the inscription is the lower part of a seated figure of the deceased.

The Lower Lintel

The lower lintel bears a horizontal row of hieroglyphs, reading: "King's Relative of the Court, Nj'-nh-Hume".
The Right Outer Jamb

The right outer jamb bears a vertical row of incised hieroglyphs, reading: "... at the Opening Day of the Year Feast, the Feast of Thoth, the First of the Year Feast, the Wig Feast, and every feast and every day, to the Honoured One, (Nj-'nh-) Hnmw".

The left outer jamb bears a vertical inscription, reading: "... the Overseer of the Commissions of the Court, the Inspector of the Nubians, the King's Purificator, the Honoured by the Great God, Nj-'nh-Hnmw".

The Right Inner Jamb

The right inner jamb is divided into two registers, in the upper one of which is a figure of Nj-'nh-Hnmw represented in a walking attitude. Above his head is inscribed: "The Overseer of the Commissions of the Royal Court, Nj-'nh-Hnmw".

The bottom register contains a figure of a woman, probably the wife of the deceased, but the space above her head is uninscribed.

The Left Inner Jamb

This jamb is also divided into two registers, in the upper one of which is a representation of Nj-'nh-Hnmw, similar to that on the right jamb. Above his head is inscribed: "The King's Purificator, the Honoured One, Nj-'nh-Hnmw".

The lower register also contains the figure of a man, represented in a walking attitude. Above his head is inscribed: "His son, Hj.t-nfr".

The surface of the wall, lying between the two false-doors, was also sculptured with scenes and inscriptions (Fig. 131, Pl. LXI). At the top are faint traces of an offering-list. On the right-hand side of the wall is a large figure of the deceased seated on a bovine-legged chair before an offering-table; his head is obliterated. The offering-table, which is laden with bread and beer rests upon a low stand under which is a ewer and a basin. Under the left side of the table is inscribed: "Thousands of jars of beer, thousands of bread and cakes".
In front of the deceased the scene is divided into three registers, in the upper one of which are shown various kinds of food and drink offerings. The middle register shows various varieties of water fowl, some of which have their name inscribed above them. The first is called \( \text{\textae} \), \( \text{\textae} \), the third, \( \text{\textae} \), \( \text{\textae} \), the fifth \( \text{\textae} \), pigeon; the sixth is a species of crane (1). The third register begins with a man who stands before the deceased and holds an incense burner in his outstretched hands; before him is inscribed: "Presenting incense". Behind him is another man, engaged in wringing the neck of a goose. These are followed by a group of three butchers dismembering an ox, while behind them is a deformed dwarf leading another ox, above which is inscribed \( \text{\textae} \), ox. Traces of a third animal, perhaps a hyena, tethered to a peg in the ground, bring up the rear.

The upper part of the left-hand side of this wall-space is occupied by a large, seated figure of the deceased, which also has the head lacking; before it are traces of an offering-table, to the right of which are the figures of two men facing towards the deceased. The first figure is kneeling down and holding a small jar in each hand, which he is apparently offering to the owner of the tomb. The other figure stands behind him, but the left hand which may have held some object, is damaged, while the right hand is raised before the face (2).

Limestone Slabs

Two slabs of limestone were found in the debris lying to the west of the entrance of this mastaba. They bear parts of an incised inscription reading as follows:—

No. 1.

No. 2. "... Priest of King Khafra'... Ki-ir..." This fragment perhaps relates to Ki-ir, the son of Nj'-nh-Hnmw.

Shafts

Shaft No. 1312 (Fig. 132)

Grave-pit: 0.95 x 1.0 x 1.90 m; entirely built of mud-bricks; filling of limestone debris; two side-chambers with walls of limestone supporting the roof; roof collapsed. Burial: Disordered skeletons.

SITUATION

This mastaba is situated to the south-west of that of Revd-k3 and In-kf the Sculptor, and east of the Mastaba of ‘nh-m’R (see General Plan 8, 9-0).

DESCRIPTION

The lower part of this tomb is cut in the native rock with the addition of a superstructure composed of about eight courses of local limestone masonry. The eastern façade was also cased with local limestone slabs. At a distance of about 2'50 m. from the northern end of the façade is an uninscribed false-door measuring 1'20 m. wide. It is constructed of blocks of white limestone, and its upper part is destroyed.

The Entrance

The doorway, which faces east, is entirely hewn in the native rock, and measures 1'0 wide by 2'0 m. deep. The left jamb still retains a casing of medium-sized blocks of white limestone, but the upper lintel is missing.

(1) GARDINER (“Onomastica”, I, p. 25) gives this as ‘General’, lit.: ‘overseer of a (military) expedition, and to be differentiated from the New Kingdom title ’mj-rt-mdt wr ‘generalissimo’.

(2) For. 𓊦𓊧𓊧 (M.K. to Late Period), RANKE, “Die Ägyptischen Personennamen”, p. 5, No. 17.
The Panel  (Fig. 139, Pl. I.XII)

The panel is composed of two slabs of white limestone, and the scene incised upon it occupies only the centre of its total surface, leaving a blank space on either side. The deceased is represented seated upon a bovine-legged chair. His left hand is closed, and is laid upon his breast, while the right hand rests open upon his lap. He wears a short, curled wig, and a broad necklace, while his body is clad in a leopard's skin which fastens by a knot of ribbons upon the left shoulder. Surrounding his head are three rows of incised hieroglyphs, reading:

1. "The Overseer of the Army."
2. "The Divine Treasurer."
3. "Shm-kf."

In front of him is an offering-table, to the right of which is an inscription composed of one horizontal and one vertical row of incised hieroglyphs, reading: "That offerings of bread, beer, cakes, oxen, and geese may come forth to him in every good feast and every day, for ever."

Below the offering-table is inscribed: "A thousand oxen, a thousand geese, a thousand jars of wine (?), a thousand garments, a thousand jars of beer, a thousand loaves of bread."
At the top right-hand corner of the panel is a register containing three small figures, the first of which represents a naked boy. His right hand is placed upon his shoulder in a gesture of respect, and he holds his right wrist with his left hand. In front of him a vertical row of hieroglyphs reads: "His child, Iwr."

The other two figures represent girls. They are both shown in a standing attitude, with their right hands placed upon their breasts. They wear long wigs, and long, tight robes. In front of the first girl is inscribed: "Ij-nfr.t"; and in front of the second girl is inscribed: "Mr-tf.s". Although it is not expressly stated, we may safely conclude that these figures represent the daughters of the deceased.

The lower lintel is mostly weathered away, and all that remains are parts of two horizontal rows of hieroglyphs, which read:

(1) "... gives, Presiding Over ... a burial in ... after a very good old age (to) the Possessor of Honour before ... of the Army ..."

(2) "... to him in the Opening Day of the Year Feast, the First of the Year Feast, the Wig Feast, the Feast of Thoth, the Wh-k-Feast, the Great Feast, the Feast of the Coming Forth of Min, (Mn.w) ..."

The remaining parts of the doorway are uninscribed.

The Chapel

The entrance opens into a small, rectangular chapel measuring 5.25 × 2.15 m., which is hewn in the native rock. Part of the eastern wall, lying immediately to the left of the entrance, is cased with small blocks of limestone, as an attempt to remedy a natural fault in the rock.

In the floor of the south-western corner is the opening of Shaft No. 1388.

Shaft No. 1388 (Fig. 140)

Mastaba of 'Ankh-em-sa-el
No. 16

Fig. 141

EXCAVATIONS AT GIZA, 1934-1935
 Situation

The Mastaba of 'nh m-si.f lies to the south of that of Ki-dwi (see General Plan 8-N, O).

Description

This mastaba is wholly built of local limestone masonry. The entrance, which is situated at the northern end of the eastern wall, measures 0.54 m. wide by 0.42 m. deep.

The Lintel (Fig. 142, Pl. LXIII)

This lintel is formed of local limestone. It was found lying on the ground in front of the doorway, but has been restored to its proper position.

It bears three horizontal rows of incised hieroglyphs, reading:

1. "A boon which the (King) gives, and a boon which Anubis, Presiding Over the God's Dwelling, Imj-wt (gives) that he may be buried in the Necropolis, after a very good old age."

2. "A boon which (Osiris) gives, that offerings of bread, cake, and beer, may come forth to him in the Opening Day of the Year Feast, the Feast of Thoth, the First of the Year Feast, the Wig Feast, and every feast and every day eternally."

3. "The King's Relative, the Overseer of the Officials, the Judge, the Eldest of the Audience Hall, the Honoured by the Great God, 'nh-m-si.f.'"

At the end of the inscription is a representation of the deceased in a walking attitude accompanied by his wife. He holds a long staff in his left hand and a handkerchief in his right hand.

The Drum (Fig. 143, Pl. LXIV, A)

The drum of this mastaba was torn from its place, and was found in the debris filling the chapel of the Mastaba of Hm. It is incised with a horizontal row of hieroglyphs, reading: "The Overseer of Officials 'nh-m-s3.f'."

The upper part of the jamb is damaged.

The Jambs (Fig. 143)

The lower part of the right-hand jamb bears the remain of a vertical row of hieroglyphs, reading: "... they pray the God (on the behalf of) the Overseer of the Officials, 'nh-m-s3./'."

The Right Thickness (Fig. 144, Pl. LXIV, B)

On the right thickness the deceased is represented in a walking attitude, and facing east, as though stepping out of the tomb. He wears a long wig, and a false-beard; around his neck is a broad necklace, and his body is clad in a short kilt with a triangular apron. He holds a long staff in his left hand, and a handkerchief in his right hand. Above his head is a horizontal row of hieroglyphs, reading: "The Overseer of the Officials, 'nh-m-s3.f'."

Standing in front of him is the figure of a naked boy. In his left hand he holds the lower end of the staff, and in his right hand, he carries a hoopoe. Above his head is inscribed: "(His) son, loved by him, ḫ3-t-ḥḥ.tj".

Much of the dark red colour with which these figures were originally painted, still remains.

On the left thickness, 'nh-m-si.f is depicted in a similar manner as on the right thickness.

In front of him is a small figure of a man, who is grasping the lower end of the staff. Above his head are two vertical rows of hieroglyphs, reading: "His eldest son, beloved by him, the Judge, and Scribe, Mr-nk.f".

To the south of the entrance was a serdab measuring 0.70 m. wide by 2.00 m. long, and built against the eastern façade of the mastaba. Only one course of the walls of this serdab now remains.

The Chapel

The entrance opens into a narrow, rectangular chapel measuring 4.00×1.12 m., in the western wall, of which are situated two false-doors.

The Northern False-Door (Figs. 146, 146a, Pl. LXV)

It is made of local limestone, and was found broken into several pieces, and having its inscriptions plastered over with mud. The upper lintel is lacking.

On the panel 'A' 'nh-m-si.f is represented seated upon a stool, and stretching forth his right hand towards an offering-table which is set before him. At the top of the panel are two horizontal rows of incised hieroglyphs, reading: "The Judge, the Eldest of the Audience Hall, the Honoured One 'nh-m-si.f".

Under the offering-table is inscribed: "A thousand loaves of bread, a thousand jars of beer, a thousand oxen, and a thousand fowls".
The figure of the deceased still bears traces of its original red colour.

On B are two horizontal rows of hieroglyphs, reading:

(1) "The Judge Attached to nh, Who Judges Justly."

(2) "The Honoured by the Great God, 'nh-m-st.f."

At the end of the inscription is a representation of the deceased in a walking attitude, and holding a long staff in his left hand.

On C and D are identical inscriptions, reading: "A boon which the King gives, and a boon which Anubis, Presiding Over the God's Dwelling Imy-nt (gives), a burial to him in the Necropolis after a good old age, to the Judge, the Eldest of the Audience Hall, 'nh-m-st.f".

At the bottom of each of these two jambs is a small representation of the deceased, in a walking attitude, and facing inwards towards the door.

On E and F the inscriptions are also identical, and read: "His wife, loved by him, the Priestess of the Goddess Hathor, Mistress of the Sycamore, the Priestess of the Goddess Nt (Neith), Ss-std.t".

At the end is a representation of the lady Ss-std.t in a standing attitude and facing inwards towards the door.

The southern false-door is very badly damaged. Faint traces of the figure of a man may be observed at the bottom of the right inner jamb.
The wall space lying between these two false-doors was originally covered with sculptured scenes, most of which have weathered away. A representation of the deceased seated upon a bovine-legged chair may still be seen at the right side of the southern false-door (Fig. 147, Pl. LXV, B).

3. $\text{imj-rš H'j./R'-wr}$ "Overseer of the Pyramid (called) 'Khafra' is Great".

4. $\text{hrj sḏt nb.f}$ "Secretary of His Master".

Situation

The Mastaba of $K\text{r}-pr$ is situated against the northern wall of that of $Njr$-ḥrwt (see General Plan 9-P).

Description

This mastaba, which is in a very ruinous state, consists of a small chapel lying immediately to the north of the main entrance to the Mastaba of $Njr$-ḥrwt. Its doorway, now almost entirely demolished, opened northward.

The False-Door (Fig. 150, Pl. LXVI, B)

The false-door was found lying face downwards in the debris; its upper lintel and panel are lacking.

The Lower Lintel

The lower lintel is mostly eroded, but bears faint traces of the titles: "Overseer of the Pyramid called 'Khafra' is Great, and 'King's Purificator'."

The Drum

This bears traces of the name: "$K\text{r}-pr$".

The Inner Jambs

Both inner jambs bear identical inscriptions, reading: "The Greatest of the Ten of Upper Egypt, the Overseer of the Pyramid called 'Khafra' is Great', $K\text{r}-pr$".

The Right Outer Jamb

It bears a vertical row of hieroglyphs, reading: "... Secretary, Beloved by His Master, He who Judges Justly in the Great Court, $K\text{r}-pr$".

This jamb bears a vertical inscription, reading: "... He who Judges Justly in the Great Court, the Beloved by His Master, the Honoured by the Great God, Ks-pr".

At the bottom of each jamb is a figure of the deceased sculptured in relief. They are identical and represent him in a walking attitude, carrying a long staff. He wears a curled wig, a false beard, and a short kilt with a triangular apron.

The Mastaba of Nfr-hwae

Situation

This mastaba lies to the south-west of that of Queen Rḥt-R, and to the south of the Mastaba of Ks-pr (see General Plan 9-P).
DESCRIPTION

The entrance opens northwards, access to it being gained through the Chapel of \( Ki-pr \).

It is somewhat narrow, measuring about \( 0.60 \text{ m.} \) wide.

The lower part of the jambs, together with the threshold, are still in situ, but the drum was found lying in the debris in front of the doorway of the Chapel of \( Ki-pr \).

The Drum (Fig. 151, Pl. LXVI, A)

It bears two horizontal rows of hieroglyphs, reading:

1. "The Greatest of the Ten of Upper Egypt, the Overseer of the Pyramid called 'Khafra' is Great', \( Nfr-hww \)."

2. "The King's Relative, the Director of the King's Purificators, the Overseer of the Pyramid called 'Khafra' is Great', \( Ssm-nfr \)."

This entrance gives access to a long passage, measuring \( 11.15 \times 1.55 \text{ m.} \), and running from north to south. In the southern wall of this passage is the squint of a serdab which lies behind, and which measures \( 1.0 \times 1.55 \text{ m.} \). Unfortunately it contained nothing but limestone debris and sand.

The False-Door of \( Ssm-nfr \) (Fig. 152, Pl. LXVII)

It was found lying upon its side against the eastern wall of the passage, and is fashioned from a monolithic slab of local limestone. The upper lintel and the panel are lacking.

The Lower Lintel

It bears a horizontal row of hieroglyphs, reading: "(The Overseer of) the Pyramid called 'Khafra' is great'."

The Inner Jambs

Both inner jambs bear identical inscriptions reading: "The Greatest of the Ten of Upper Egypt, the Overseer of the Pyramid called 'Khafra' is Great', the Secretary of His Master, \( Ssm-nfr \)."
The Right Outer Jamb

It bears a vertical row of hieroglyphs, reading: “. . . him, in the necropolis of the western desert, after a good old age, that he may walk upon the good ways before . . . Sīm-nfr”.

The Left Outer Jamb

This jamb is nearly all defaced, but a few signs can be traced in the centre, which read: “. . . the Feast of Burning, the Feast of the Epiphany of Min, at every Feast . . . ”.

At the bottom of each jamb is a figure of the owner of the false-door. They are identical, and represent Sīm-nfr in a walking attitude, carrying a long staff.

Near the southern end of the western wall of the passage is the entrance to the chapel. It measures 0.65 m. wide, and is surmounted by a weather-worn lintel. This lintel was originally inscribed, but now bears only a few faint traces of disconnected signs.

The chapel, which measures 2.70 × 1.20 m., is entirely built of large blocks of local limestone.

The False-Door of Nfr-hww (Pl. LXVIII)

In the western wall of the chapel is a false-door of local limestone, measuring 0.57 m. wide. The drum and jambs are uninscribed, but the lintel bears two horizontal rows of hieroglyphs, reading:

1) “A boon which the King gives, and a boon which Anubis, who Presides over the God’s Dwelling (gives) a burial in the western desert after a good old age, to the Honoured One (before) the Great God, Nfr-hww.”

2) “That offering may come forth to him of bread, cakes, and beer at the Opening Day of the Year Feast, the First of the Year Feast, the Wỷg Feast, and every day (to) the King’s Relative, the Overseer of the Pyramid called ‘Khafra’ is Great’ the Inspector of . . . the Secretary.”

At the end of the inscription is a representation of the deceased and his wife seated side by side. The upper part of the figure of Nfr-hww is destroyed. Behind the lady is inscribed: “His Wife the King’s Relative, Ṣṣ-nḥ-Ht-Hr”.
Above this lintel is an offering-list in a very bad state of preservation.

Shaft No. 1366 (Fig. 153)

Grave-pit: $1.40 \times 1.55 + 4.77$ m.; filling of sand and debris; side-chamber on the south; aperture open; a sarcophagus hewn in a rock-cut platform $0.75$ m. high; the cover was found smashed.

SITUATION

The Mastaba of Sema-ankh lies at a little distance to the east of that of Queen Rḥt-Ḥr (see General Plan 8-Q).

DESCRIPTION

It is built of medium-sized blocks of local limestone. The doorway opens northwards and measures 0.65 × 0.55 m. The lintel is lacking, and the drum is badly eroded, but bears the remains of a horizontal inscription, reading (Fig. 157):

"... the Judge, and Scribe, SM’NH".

FIG. 157
FIG. 158
Mastaba of Sema-ankh
No. 18

Exxavations at Giza, 1934-1935

Fawzy Ibrahim
The right outer thickness (Fig. 159, Pl. LXIX, D) is also in a bad state of preservation, but bears a large figure of the owner of the tomb, who is represented in a walking attitude, holding the $Hrp$ baton in his right hand. He wears a long wig, a false beard, a broad necklace, and a short kilt, upheld by a girdle around the hips. In front of his face can be seen the traces of the inscription setting forth his name.

The left outer thickness (Fig. 160, Pl. LXIX, B) is a little better preserved. Here again the deceased is represented in a walking attitude, and clad in the same manner as before, but holds a long staff in his right hand. In front of his face is incised his name, "Smi'-nh". Opposite his legs is a miniature figure of a man, clad in a short kilt, probably the son of Smi'-nk; he holds the lower part of the long staff.

This doorway gives access to a narrow, rectangular corridor, measuring $1.00 \times 0.720$ m. Of the eastern wall, only five courses of masonry remain, and this wall is in reality the western wall of the adjoining mastaba. In the western wall of this corridor-chapel are two false-doors of local limestone, each of which has lost its upper lintel.

The Northern False-Door (Pl. LXIX, C)

The panel and the lower lintel are formed of a single block of local limestone. The upper part of the panel is damaged, and all that remains of the scene sculptured upon it, is the lower part of the figure of a woman seated before an offering-table.

The Lower Lintel

It bears a horizontal row of hieroglyphs, which, like the damaged scene upon the panel, is carved in relief, and reads: "His Mother, the King's Relative, $Ny\cdot'nh\cdot nfr$".

The Right Outer Jamb

Its upper part is damaged, and the beginning of the vertical inscription incised upon it is lost. The remainder reads: "the Scribe of the Army, the Judge, and Inspector of Scribes, the Overseer of the Ka-servants, the King's Relative, the Beloved by His Master Every Day, Smi'-nh".

“A boon which (the King) gives . . . the Opening Day of the Year Feast, the Feast of Thoth, the First of the Year Feast, the Wig Feast, the Feast of Shr, the Great Feast, Sm3-"nh." The inscriptions of the right inner jamb are totally erased with the exception of two occurrences of the sign [1] "nfr". This was wantonly done, and the nfr signs were perhaps spared out of religious respect.

This jamb bears a vertical row of hieroglyphs, reading: “A boon which (the King) gives, and a boon which Anubis gives, that offerings may come forth to her of bread, cake, and beer, at the Opening Day of the Year Feast, the Feast of Thoth, the First of the Year Feast, the Wig Feast, Nf-"nh-nfr”.

The Southern False-Door

It is fitted into a doorway leading into a small chapel, and is composed of a monolithic block of limestone.

The Panel

It is in a very bad state of preservation, and retains only a few traces of a scene representing Sm3-"nh seated before an offering-table.

The Lower Lintel

The lower lintel bears the inscription: “The Judge, and Inspector of Scribes, the King’s Purificator, Sm3-"nh”.

The right and left outer jambs each bear identical inscriptions arranged vertically; they read: “. . . the Scribe of the Army, the Judge and Inspector of Scribes, the Honoured by the Great God, Sm3-"nh”.

The Right Inner Jamb

It bears a vertical row of hieroglyphs, reading: “The Honoured by the the Great God, Sm3-"nh”.

At the bottom is a representation of the deceased in a walking attitude, one hand placed upon his breast, the other hanging at his side. He wears a long wig, and a short kilt with a triangular apron.

It also bears a vertical inscription, reading: “He who is Concerned with the King’s Affairs, Sm3-"nh”.

At the end is a figure of Sm3-"nh, identical with that depicted on the right-hand jamb.
On each side of this false-door, the surface of the wall was coated with a thick layer of plaster, upon which the scenes and inscriptions were wrought. A greater part of this plaster has crumbled away, thus resulting in the destruction of many of the scenes. To the right-hand side of the door, the wall is almost denuded of its plaster, and all that remains of the scenes it originally bore, are a few traces of the figures of a man and a boy, presumably the deceased and his son. The left-hand side is a little better preserved, and shows a figure of the deceased, executed in relief. He is represented in a walking attitude and holds a long staff in his left hand and the hrp-baton in his right one. He is clad in a short kilt, over which is draped a leopard skin, and his feet are shod with sandals. Before him is a miniature figure of his son, who holds a roll of papyrus in his left hand, and grasps the lower part of his father's staff with his right one. He wears a wide collar and a short kilt with a triangular apron. Above his head is a vertical row of hieroglyphs, reading: "The Judge, and Inspector of Scribes, *K'-nr."

The surface of the wall, lying between the two false-doors, is sculptured in relief and was originally painted in brilliant colours, traces of which still remain (PI. LXIX, A).

At the top of the scene was an offering-list, most of which has perished. Below is a large figure of the owner of the tomb seated before an offering-table. He wears a long wig, a false beard, a wide necklace, and a short kilt. Above the table is a narrow register containing articles of food and drink offerings. Below the table, which rests upon a low stand, is an ewer and a basin.

To the right of the table are two superposed registers, in the upper one of which are the figures of seven men, all of whom are performing ceremonies for the benefit of the deceased.

The first man stands before the offering-table, and has both hands raised as though he were placing some article, now damaged, upon it (?). The second man kneels upon the ground and holds a basin, into which the third man, who stands behind him, pours water from a jar (2). The fourth man carries a leg of beef; while the remaining three men are engaged in dismembering an ox.

The lower register contains the figures of eight men, the first of whom holds a broom with which to smooth the sanded floor of the tomb after the ceremonies are completed (2).

The second man kneels upon the ground and holds a small chest (?) in his outstretched hands. The third man carries a leg of beef, and the remaining five men are occupied with the flaying and dismemberment of a bull (2).

To the right side of the northern false-door, the wall was also divided into superposed registers, but only a very few faint traces now remain; the best preserved figures being those representing a group of men conducting a fatted ox to the tomb.

Two later intrusive burials were made in this corridor chapel, one of which was constructed near to the southern false-door. It is due to this fact that the sculptured scenes occupying the wall at this spot have retained much of their original colouring.

The second burial was made at the southern end of the passage. In both cases, the roofs of these intrusive burials had collapsed, and severely damaged the skeletons interred therein.

(? On the other hand, he may be burning incense.
(2) For the meaning and purpose of these rites, see "Excavations at Giza", Vol. VI, Part II, p. 84, f.
As before mentioned, the southern false-door is fitted into a doorway which at one time gave access to a small chapel, also containing an intrusive burial. In this case also the skeleton had suffered damage owing to the collapse of the roof.

Four blocks of limestone sculptured with parts of a man's figure were recovered from the western wall of this later burial, and they fit together with three other slabs found in the debris to the south of the chapel, of which they all originally formed the southern wall. The sculpture, which is executed in relief, represents the deceased in a walking attitude, and carrying the krp-baton in his right hand, and a long staff in his left one (Pl. LXX).

The Inner Chapel

This chapel measures 1.00 × 7.20 m.

The Western Wall (Fig. 161, Pls. LXXI, LXXII)

Two false-doors are set in the western wall; the northern false-door has its upper lintel lacking, and its remaining parts are fashioned from a single slab of limestone.
The Panel

The panel bears traces of a scene in which a man is seated before an offering-table. Under the table is inscribed: "A thousand loaves of bread, a thousand jars of beer, a thousand garments, a thousand alabaster bowls".

The lower lintel is badly eroded, all that remains of its original horizontal row of inscription being the beginning of some title, reading: "The Overseer of . . .".

The Right Outer Jamb

It bears the damaged remains of a vertical inscription, reading: " . . . The King's Relative of the Court, . . . made to him . . .".

The Left Outer Jamb

This inscription is also badly mutilated, but the remaining signs read: " . . . the Overseer of the New Cities of Min . . .".

On each of the inner jambs are two superposed figures of male offering-bearers, carved in relief; they are represented carrying different articles for the service of the Ka of the deceased.

The Southern False-Door (Fig. 161)

The surface of the southern false-door is almost entirely eroded, the only part of its inscriptions now remaining being the signs, reading: "The King's Relative of the Court".

This occurs in a horizontal row, inscribed on the lower lintel.

The surface of the wall lying between these two false-doors is beautifully sculptured in relief with a large offering-scene. In it is depicted a large representation of a man seated before a table of offerings. In front of him is the lower part of a vertical row of hieroglyphs, reading: "(The Honoured) by His Master".

Beneath the offering-table is inscribed: "A thousand jars of beer, a thousand cakes and loaves of bread, a thousand alabaster bowls, a thousand garments, a thousand oxen, and a thousand geese".

Above the offering-table and a little to the right-hand side are three narrow registers in which are displayed various kinds of offerings. Below them is a small figure of a man in a standing attitude; he is facing the deceased and has his right arm bent, and the hand placed on the beast; while the left arm hangs at his side. Above his head is inscribed: "The King's Relative of the Court . . .". In front of him is a vertical inscription, reading: "His son, beloved by him".

Although the name is erased, there is a faint possibility that this smaller figure represents Sm3-'nh. If this is so, then this chapel must belong to his father, and we cannot admire the unfilial conduct of Sm3-'nh, displayed by his action of fitting a false-door into the entrance in such a manner as to cut off access to his father's chapel.
Below the above-mentioned offering-scene in a narrow register is which is depicted a group of two butchers dismembering an ox. Behind them is a stand upon which rests an oval object, perhaps the heart of the ox. To the left-hand side of the butchers are the figures of three men in walking attitudes. The upper parts of the first two are obliterated but the third man is complete and carries a gazelle across his shoulders.

TITLE

1. |  rb njswt "King's Relative".

FAMILY

There were at least four sons of the deceased mentioned in this mastaba, but their names have been entirely obliterated.

Daughter:

1. Nj-kw-Ht-Hr (?).
2. (?)
3. Ilj.
4. Fji.

SITUATION

The Mastaba of Nj-kw-Ht-Hr is situated to the east of that of Hmwy, and to the west of the Mastabas of In-kl. the Sculptor, and Nj-'nh-Hnmw (see General Plan 7-O).

DESCRIPTION

The core-masonry of this mastaba consists of mud-brick, but it is cased and lined with medium-sized blocks of local limestone, most of which have now disappeared.

The main entrance opens northwards from the way leading to the tunnel cut underneath the Causeway of the Second Pyramid. It gives access to a rectangular fore-court, measuring 4'60 x 1'90 m. In the eastern wall of this fore-court is a doorway opening into a chamber, which lies immediately to the north-west of the Mastaba of Nj-'nh-Hnmw. The inner walls of this chamber are plastered with mud, and the eastern half of the chamber is occupied by two later burial pits, Nos. 4008 and 4011.

Against the southern wall of the fore-court is built a narrow serdab of mud-brick, in which were found nine statuettes, buried in the debris of crumbled bricks (Pl. LXXIII, B, C). These statuettes will be described hereinafter.

The fore-court leads to a long corridor measuring 14'10 x 1'30 m., and running from north to south. At its extreme southern end is a serdab, entirely built of local limestone. The upper courses of its masonry are ruined, and it proved to contain nothing but wind-borne sand. The squint is situated in the middle of its northern wall. In the corridor was found a block of limestone inscribed: "Hr-usr-ib -Ntj-usr-m" (Pl. LXXIII, A) which are the names of Khafra'.
Mastaba of Ny-kaw-Hathor
No. 19

Fig. 166
The Chapel

Near the southern end of the western wall of the corridor is the entrance to the Chapel of Nj-kt.w-Ht-Hr. The lintel and drum are entirely lacking, while the upper parts of the jambs are also in a ruinous state. All that remains of the scenes sculptured on the right thickness is the figure of a man leading a long-horned ox. Behind this group are traces of the outline of a second ox (Fig. 167).

The chapel is built of medium-sized blocks of local limestone, and the walls were originally sculptured and painted, but owing to the poor quality of the stone, the scenes have suffered much with the passing of the centuries.

The Northern Wall (Fig. 168, Pl. LXXIII, D)

We were fortunate enough to find two registers on this wall in a very good state of preservation. In the upper register is depicted a boat in which are three men, apparently hauling on ropes. Behind them is a group of eight fishermen hauling in a net full of different kinds of fish. Just outside the net is the figure of a hippopotamus.

In the lower register are two representations of sailing ships, each with its sails furled, and the masts dismantled and stowed away on the roof of the cabin.

The first ship is propelled by seven oarsmen (?), and steered by two men wielding long paddles; another man stands on the prow, holding a long, forked pole, perhaps a sounding rod with which to ascertain the depth of the stream, and thus avoid grounding the ship upon mud-banks.

The second ship is similarly equipped, but is manned by six rowers instead of seven.

In the cabin of the first vessel are the figures of two men, apparently the owner of the tomb and an attendant. Between the two ships is an inscription, reading: "A happy journey".

(?) Although only seven rowers are shown, we may suppose that the actual number would have been fourteen, as the vessel is too large, and the oars too long for one man to use a single pair of oars. The artist attempted to show the complete action of rowing in the first boat the men lean forward and pull on the oars, while in the second boat they lean backwards with the stroke completed.
The ships are coloured dark yellow, the flesh of the men, reddish brown, and the water dark blue; while below the scene is a dado of dark red.

The Western Wall (Fig. 169)

On the right-hand side of this wall is an incised offering-list, most of which is eroded. To the left is the remainder of the lower part of a representation of the deceased seated before an offering-table. In front of her, but on a much smaller scale, is an attendant bearing two linen bands.

The False-Door (Fig. 170)

To the left of the above-mentioned scene is a monolithic false-door, the upper lintel of which, and the upper part of the panel are missing. The lower lintel bears a horizontal row of hieroglyphs, reading: ”The King’s Relative, Nj-kw-Ht-Hr”.

At the end of this inscription is a representation of the deceased seated before an offering-table, above which can be seen a trussed fowl and a joint of meat.

The jambs are badly weather-worn, the only part of their inscriptions now remaining being a few traces of the “Htp-di-nisut” formula which appears upon the left jamb.

The surface of the remaining part of the western wall is entirely eroded.

The Eastern Wall (Fig. 171)

The right-hand side of the eastern wall is entirely effaced and all that remains of the left-hand side is the extremity of a single register in which are depicted the figures of four men and four women, only two of which are complete. These persons, who are most probably the children of the deceased, are all represented in a standing attitude.
In front of each of the women is incised her name, the last two of which read “Itj” and “Ffj” respectively.

The Southern Wall (Fig. 172)

All that remains of the scenes sculptured upon this wall are the lower parts of a representation of a man and a woman seated together before an offering-table.

THE STATUETTES OF THE WORKERS

As already stated, the mud-brick serdab of this tomb contained a fine series of statuettes of workers, the function of which was to labour for the benefit of their owners in the Other World. This custom is very likely a humane and civilized development of the primitive usage of slaughtering the slaves and attendants of the Kings and nobles and burying them in or near their master’s tomb that they might continue to minister to his needs in the Hereafter.

At first glance these statuettes appear to be rudely carved, and of careless workmanship; but careful examination reveals rather the opposite. Each figure is a truly characteristic little study, full of vigour and energy, while the coarse features and clumsy limbs are thoroughly typical of the class of persons whom the statuettes are intended to represent the lower orders of the fellahin.

Statuette of a Woman grinding Grain (Pl. LXXIV)

Material.—White limestone, painted.

Dimensions.—Height: 24.0 cms. Breadth across shoulders: 10.5 cms.

Preservation.—Good.

Workmanship.—Exceedingly life-like and animated.
Subject.—A woman grinding grain between two stones. She is represented kneeling, the whole weight of her body thrown forward on to the upper grinding stone, which she grasps firmly with both hands. The right foot is crossed over the left ankle, doubtless to give more power to the downward thrust of the grinding-stone. Her head is slightly raised, and her face, by no means beautiful, is nevertheless rendered attractive by its pleasant, cheerful expression. The strong muscular limbs, and sturdy, well-developed body, are excellently rendered. The woman wears a skull cap which hides her hair, with the exception of her fringe and side-locks; the upper part of her body is bare, but she wears a short kilt which reaches half-way down her thighs, and is supported by a belt around her hips.

Colours.—Traces of black on the hair, eyes, brows, and pedestal; flesh, yellow; kilt, white, grinding-stones, dark red, perhaps to imitate granite.

Inscription.—On the left upper surface of the pedestal is inscribed: [symbol or image]. "The Ka-servant, Hnw.t-nw".

Statuette of a Woman Sifting Flour (?)(Pl. LXXV)

Material.—White limestone, painted.

Workmanship.—Good.

Preservation.—The head is missing, but the remainder of the statuette is extremely well-preserved.

Subject.—It represents a woman squatting upon the ground, apparently engaged in sifting flour in a basket-work sieve. Great attention has been given to the details of the muscles of the arms and back, and the finger and toe nails are carefully indicated. She is clad in a short kilt, similar to that worn by the preceding statuette.

Colours.—Pedestal, black; flesh, traces of dark yellow.

Inscription.—On the front of the upper surface of the pedestal is incised: [symbol or image]. "The Ka-servant p-hr.t’.

Statuette of a Man dressing a Goose (Pl. LXXVI. B, D)

Material.—White limestone, painted.

Dimensions.—Height: 27.0 cms. Breadth across shoulders: 10.5 cms.

Preservation.—Very good.

Workmanship.—Very natural and true to type.

Subject.—A man squatting upon the ground, with one leg drawn up parallel to his body, and the other doubled under him. He seems to be engaged in dressing a plucked goose which he holds on a slab before him. A hole is drilled in his closed right hand in a manner which suggests that it originally held a knife, perhaps of metal. A longitudinal cut is shown along the left side of the goose, coinciding with the direction in which the knife was apparently held; while the head of the bird is severed from its body.
The man is clad in a short kilt, and wears a close-fitting skull-cap; and both he and the goose are carved from one piece of stone, the base of which fits into a slot in the pedestal.

Colours.—Pedestal, black; flesh, dark red; kilt and skull-cap, white; goose, yellow.

Inscriptions.—On the front of the upper surface of the pedestal is inscribed: \( \text{“Issj'-nh”} \).

Statuette of a Cook (Pl. LXXVII, A, B, C)

Material.—White limestone, painted.

Preservation.—Good.

Workmanship.—Very good.

Subject.—A man squatting upon the ground before a charcoal fire; he is engaged in cooking something, perhaps deep-frying food, in a large vessel which he holds over the fire. In front of him is a round, flat dish, apparently in readiness to receive the food when cooked. He wears a short kilt and has his natural hair cut short. The figure of the man, and the fireplace are cut from one piece of stone and inserted into a slot in the pedestal, while the flat dish was also carved separately and mortared into the pedestal.

Colours.—Hair and pedestal, black; flesh, red; fireplace, dish and cooking-pot, red; fire, red and black; kilt, white.

Inscriptions.—The upper left-hand surface of the pedestal bears the inscription: \( \text{“The Ka-servant, Rm-šm-kṣj (?)”} \).

Statuette of a Man Pitching Jars (Pl. LXXVI, A, C)

Material.—White limestone, painted.

Preservation.—The right hand is missing, otherwise the figure is well preserved.

Workmanship.—Very good.

Subject.—A man squatting upon the ground, engaged in pitching some earthenware jars to render them waterproof. One jar is held before him, gripped by his left hand and his feet; while nine other jars, all of the wide mouth and tapering base type, are stacked in three rows of three jars each in front of him. He wears a curious garment which, passing over his left shoulder covers his chest and back and leaves his right shoulder bare, it descends half way down to his buttocks and is confined by a girdle at the waist. The man is carved separately and inserted into a slot in the pedestal; while the stack of jars is also carved separately and mortared into the pedestal.

Colours.—The hair and pedestal, black; flesh and jars, dark red; tunic, white.

(*) RANKE, “Persönennamen”, p. 231. 8.
Statuette of a Cook or Bakeress (Pl. LXXVIII, A, B, C).

Material.—White limestone, painted.

Dimensions.—Height: 23.2 cms. Breadth across shoulders: 10.0 cms.

Preservation.—The front part of the pedestal and the fireplace is missing, otherwise well-preserved.

Workmanship.—Somewhat rough and clumsy, lacking in fine detail and by no means up to the standard of work displayed in the other figures.

Subject.—This statuette represents a woman squatting upon the ground. Her left leg is drawn sharply up against her body, and her right leg is doubled up beneath her. Her head is turned to the right, in order to protect her face from the heat of the fire, which was originally placed before her. Her left arm is bent and the hand raised and placed open upon the nape of the neck. The right hand rests upon her left knee, and originally held some object, perhaps a fan to increase the glow of the charcoal fire. She wears her hair cut short to the nape of her neck and is clad in a tight-fitting garment that passes over the left shoulder, and descends to a little above the knees.

Colours.—Faint traces of black appear upon the pedestal and the hair, and a trace of dark yellow remains upon the right foot.

Statuette of a Brewer (Pl. LXXIX, C, D, E)

Material.—White limestone, painted.

Dimensions.—Height: 32.8 cms. Breadth across shoulders: 10.3 cms.

Preservation.—Very good.

Workmanship.—Very well modelled, vigorous, and life-like.

Subject.—A man engaged in straining the fermenting barley-bread, one of the processes of brewing beer. He stands with his knees slightly flexed and his body bent forward; his hands are plunged into a basket of fermenting barley-bread which rests upon a large, spouted jar before him. This jar, in its turn, rests upon an overturned basket, presumably to rise it to a more convenient height. He wears a short, curled wig, and a short kilt, upheld by a belt around the waist. The general effect of this statuette is most pleasing and life-like.

Colours.—Wig, and pedestal, black; flesh and jar, dark red; baskets, yellow; kilt, white.

Inscription.—On the front of the upper surface of the pedestal is inscribed: $\text{wr-dj}$.

Statuette of a Fuller (?) (Pl. LXXIX, A, B)

Material.—White limestone, painted.

Dimensions.—Height: 27.5 cms. Breadth across shoulders: 11.0 cms.
Preservation.—Good.

Workmanship.—Good.

Subject.—A man apparently engaged in washing a garment on a sloping block of stone. Such a practice is still common among the fellahin of to-day, the operation being carried on daily beside the Nile, or on the banks of the canals. The man kneels down with both legs bent under him, and the feet crossed behind. He wears a short kilt, and a close-fitting skull-cap.

Colours.—Flesh, dark red; kilt, white; pedestal, black.

STATUETTE OF A WOMAN KNEADING DOUGH (?) (PI. LXXX, A, B, C).

Material.—White limestone, painted.

Dimensions.—Height: 28.2 cm. Breadth across the shoulders: 9.4 cm.

Preservation.—Good.

Workmanship.—Very good, note the effect of muscular effort conveyed by the raising of the shoulders, and the drawn in chin.

Subject.—This statuette represents a woman kneading dough, or some other substance, contained in a jar which rests on the ground before her. She kneels on the ground, the jar held firmly between her knees and her weight resting upon her heels. She wears her natural hair cut short, and is clad in a close-fitting tunic that extends from a little below the breasts to half-way down the thighs. The woman and the jar are carved from a single piece of stone, and are fitted into a slot in the pedestal.

Colours.—Hair and pedestal, black; flesh, yellow; tunic, white; jar, dark red.

Inscription.—On the upper front surface of the pedestal is inscribed: "The Ka-servant Nj-M.jt-Ht-Hr".

Mastaba of Kay-swa-zaw
No. 20

Passage to Tomb of Prince Iwn-Ra"
THE MASTABA OF KIJ-SWDJW

DESCRIPTION

The doorway opens southwards, and is cut in the rock forming the northern side of the passage leading to the fore-court of the Mastaba of Iwn-R'. It measures 0·55 × 0·75 m.

The Lintel (Fig. 188, Pl. LXXXI, A)

It is hewn in the solid rock, and bears three horizontal rows of hieroglyphs, which are, however, somewhat weather-worn. The remaining parts of this inscription read:

(1) "... (a burial) in the (western) desert after a very good old age before the Great God; that offerings of bread, cake, and beer may come forth to him in the First of the Year Feast, the Feast of Thoth, the Wsh-h Feast, (?), the Wig Feast, the Great Feast, . . . ."

(2) "..."

(3) "... the Priest of Horus, the President of the Wsh-chamber, the Scribe of the King's Linen, He who Follows in the Footsteps (of the King) as Protector, the Honoured by His Master, the King's Relative of the Court, . . . ."

The Drum (Fig. 189, Pl. LXXXI, B)

It bears a horizontal row of hieroglyphs reading: "The King's Relative of the Court Attached to 'Fair-is-the-Face' in the Place of the King, Kij-swdjw'."

The jambs originally bore incised inscriptions, most of which are now effaced.
The Right Jamb  (Fig. 188)

On the right jamb the following signs are still to be seen:

The Left Jamb  (Fig. 188)

The following signs are incised:

The following is carved in relief:

The Left Outer Thickness  (Fig. 189)

It originally bore a large figure of the owner of the tomb, only the back of the head of which now remains. In the top left-hand corner are the remains of two vertical rows of hieroglyphs, reading:

(1) "King's Relative of the Court, . . ."

(2) "The Beloved by His Master . . . Kij-swdi-w."

The Left Inner Thickness  (Fig. 189)

It now bears the remains of four superposed registers, carved in relief.

In the top register is the figure of a man seated beneath a trellis of vines. He holds a jar in his right hand, and a bunch of grapes in his left one.

The second register depicts a stage in the process of wine-making. Here we see three men trampling the grapes to extract the juice. They hold on to a bar suspended above their heads, in order to keep themselves from falling in the slippery pulp (1).
The third register depicts the wine being poured by a man into large amphorae, above which is inscribed: "Wine." The fourth register shows the figure of a man bending forward, his hands plunged into a large basket set upon a jar. The scene is inscribed: "Squeezing," and seems to refer to the process of making beer from fermented barley-bread.

The Right Outer Thickness (Fig. 190)

(1) "King's Relative of the Court."

(2)

The doorway gives access to a small chapel wholly cut in the rock; and measuring 2.50 x 2.40 m. It was filled with soft sand, on the surface of which lay a limestone sarcophagus containing two skeletons.

The Southern Wall (Fig. 191, Pl. LXXXII, A)

To the left of the doorway, the southern wall is sculptured in relief, the scenes being disposed in six superposed registers.

The top register depicts the plucking of geese. One man is immersing a goose in a large cauldron of hot water, set upon a fireplace, in order to loosen the feathers; while another man sits facing him, engaged in plucking a goose, which he holds up by one of its wings. Above the group is a third bird, plucked and trussed, and placed upon a tray, ready to go in the oven.

The second register shows two cooks, one of whom is apparently cleaning a goose, which rests upon a low stand before him. The second man is roasting a goose over a charcoal fire which he fans in order to keep it glowing. Between these men is a tall, slender flask, perhaps containing oil for basting the goose. Above is a third goose, apparently cooked, and resting upon a tray.
The third register appears to be concerned with brewing (?) to the left, a man is standing with his arms outstretched as though stirring some substance in a large vessel placed before him. Behind him is a kneeling man, holding a circular loaf of bread in both hands. The remainder of the register is destroyed.

The fourth register shows a row of rhomboidal loaves of bread.

The fifth register is very badly damaged, and bears only the forepart of a calf, tethered to the ground.

The bottom register is even more defaced, but from the faint outlines remaining seems to have depicted butchers dismembering oxen.

The Western Wall  (Fig. 192, Pl. LXXXIII)

The centre of the western wall is occupied by a rock-cut false-door, the lintel of which runs the whole breadth of the wall. This lintel bears two horizontal rows of hieroglyphs, reading: —

(1) "(A boon which the King gives, and a boon which) Anubis, the Lord of the Holy Land, Presiding Over the God’s Dwelling, (and a boon which) Osiris (gives), that he may be buried in the western desert after a good old age, and that he may walk in peace upon the good ways upon which walk the Honoured Ones before the Great God;
(2) "(That offerings may come forth to him at the voice) . . . the Feast of Thoth, the First of the Year Feast, the W3g Feast, the Great Feast, the Feast of Burning, the Feast of the Epiphany of Min, the Monthly Feast, the S3d Feast, the Wh-h Feast, the Monthly Feast and the Half-monthly Feast, the Beginning of the Year Feast, and at every feast and every day for ever, to the King's Relative of the Court, Kij-swdj-w."

At the end of this inscription is a representation of the deceased seated upon a chair, and holding a long staff in his left hand.

The panel is sculptured with a scene depicting Kij-swdj-w and a lady, probably his wife, seated facing each other. Between them is an offering-table, above which is inscribed: "Kij-swdj-w".

The lower lintel bears a single row of large hieroglyphs, reading: "King's Relative of the Court, Kij-swdj-w."

At the end of the row, the deceased is represented seated upon a chair, and holding a long staff.

The right inner jamb bears a vertical row of hieroglyphs, reading: "That offerings may come forth to him, of bread, cake, and beer, at the Opening Day of the Year Feast . . . Kij-swdj-w."

The right outer jamb bears a vertical inscription, reading: "The First of the Year Feast, the W3g Feast, at every feast and every day, Kij-swdj-w."

At the bottom of each jamb is a representation of the deceased, depicting him in a standing attitude, holding a long staff in one hand, and what appears to be a roll of papyrus in the other.

To the right-hand side of the false-door is a large offering-list, many of the entries of which are obliterated (1). Below this can be seen traces of the head of a large figure of the owner, of the tomb before which is a horizontal row of hieroglyphs, reading: "A boon which the King gives, (and a boon which) Anubis (gives) . . . Kij-swdj-w."

The wall on the left side of the false-door is occupied by a large scene, in which the deceased is represented seated upon a chair before an offering-table. Above the table are three narrow registers depicting various items of food and drink offerings; while below the table is inscribed: "A thousand loaves of bread, cakes, and jars of beer, a thousand alabaster bowls, a thousand of linen."

Below this scene is a narrow register in which is represented a group of four butchers disemboweling an ox.

The Eastern Wall (Pl. LXXXII, B)

This wall bears a large figure of Kij-swdj-w represented in a standing attitude. He is clad in a long kilt with a triangular apron, and a leopard skin. In his left-hand he carries a long staff, and in the right one a hpr-baton (?). In front of him is the figure of a small, naked child, probably his son.

(1) For this offering-list, see Part II of this work, pp. 125, 126, Pls. XLI-XLVIII.
Shaft No. 1380 (Fig. 193):—

Grave-pit: Irregular; sunk in the floor near the north-west corner of the chapel; depth 1'95 m. Rock-hewn; burial-chamber opening west.

Contents: A limestone sarcophagus, measuring 2'10 x 0'75 x 0'60 m.; lid slightly removed from its original place.

Leaning against the northern wall of the chamber was a rectangular slab of limestone (Pls. LXXXIV, LXXXV), the upper part of which is occupied by an offering-list, the entries of which are studied in Part II of this work. At the bottom of the offering-list is a horizontal inscription, reading:

"A boon which the King gives, and a boon which Anubis, who presides over the God’s Dwelling (gives) (and a boon which) Osiris, Lord of Dd.t (gives): That offerings of bread, cake, beer, geese and oxen may come forth (in) the opening Day of the Year Feast, the Feast of Thoth, the First of the Year Feast, the Wig Feast, the Great Feast, the Monthly Feast, the Half Monthly Feast, the Feast of the Coming Forth of Min, the Monthly Feast of Set, (every) feast (and) every day”.

Following this is a large figure of Kj-su^di.w. He is depicted seated upon a bovine-legged chair, and before him is an offering-table laden with half-loaves of bread (the gsw of the offering-lists. The deceased, who stretches out his left hand to the bread on the table, wears a long, plaited wig, a wide necklace, and an amulet suspended from a knotted cord. He is clad in a short kilt with a pleated side-wrap. Above his head is inscribed: “The King’s Relative of the Court, Kj-su^di.w.”.

Kneeling before the offering-table, and facing the deceased are three priests performing the offering-rites. The first two hold a sa-arv in each hand, and their pose is characteristic of the ritual scenes of the Fifth Dynasty (see Part II, p. 84, ff).

In front of the first priest is inscribed: “Making Glorifications (1)”. In front of this priest is inscribed: “Giving bread to his Master, Kj-su^di.w.”.

(1) For details of this rite, see Part II, p. 97.
All these priests wear curled wigs and short, plain kilts. Behind them is a list of offerings arranged in three horizontal rows. It consists of items from the old lists of the Archaic Period and early Fourth Dynasty and which had been discarded from the canonical offering-lists of the late Fourth Dynasty onwards (1). Prominent among these offerings is a detailed enumeration of linen, of varied qualities.

Terminating this list is a horizontal inscription, reading:

Last of all is inscribed: "King's Relative of the Court, Kij-sttdi-w".

SITUATION

This mastaba is situated to the north of the Pyramid City, to the east of the Mastaba of S\(\text{hm-nfr}\) (3rd Season), and a little to the west of that of H\(\text{nt}\) (3rd Season) (see General Plan 14-R).

DESCRIPTION

It is built of small blocks of local limestone, the upper courses of which are entirely destroyed. The space lying between its eastern wall, and the western wall of the uninscribed mastaba lying immediately to the east, seems to have served as a chapel.

There were originally two false-doors situated in its western wall, but the southern one, which was the larger of the two, has entirely disappeared.

It measures 0.35 m. in width, and is 1.40 m. high. The upper lintel is missing. The panel is very weather-worn, and only faint traces of the sculptured scene (which is in relief) can still be recognized. It bears a representation of a man and a woman seated facing each other, and between them, on a level with their faces, are two small offering-tables.

The man wears a short, curled wig; and the woman is clad in a long, tight robe. There may have been another offering-table occupying the space lying between these two figures.

The lower lintel bears the remains of a horizontal row of hieroglyphs, reading:

"King's Relative, Director of the Hall of Food, . . . Hnt".

The outer jambs are totally defaced. On the right inner jamb are two superposed figures sculptured in relief; the upper one of which represents a man in a walking attitude. His right arm is bent and the hand placed open upon his breast, while the left hand hangs at his side. He wears a short kilt. Above his head is inscribed: "Hnt".

The lower figure is very badly damaged, but above the head are some damaged hieroglyphs that appear to read: "Nfr.t".

The left inner jamb also bears two superposed figures. The top one is fairly well preserved, and represents a man in a walking attitude. He wears a long, plaited wig, and a short kilt. Above his head is inscribed: "His son, Kt-kh(j."

The technique displayed in the execution of these figures is somewhat crude and uninspiring.

SITUATION

This mastaba lies to the north of the Mastaba of Queen Bch.t-B and occupies a considerable amount of space of the way leading to the tunnel cut underneath the Causeway of King Khafra" (see General Plan 7-P,Q).

DESCRIPTION

It is entirely built of fairly large blocks of local limestone, the upper courses of which are destroyed.

The main entrance, measuring 0.70 × 0.60 m., opens north and leads to a small fore-court which measures 2.90 × 1.60 m. In the eastern wall of this fore-court is a doorway, measuring 0.70 × 0.61 m., which gives access to a passage measuring 4.60 × 0.95 m. This passage, which runs from west to east, terminates in a doorway (0.55 × 0.55) giving access to a T-shaped-hall. The latter measures 5.00 × 1.55 m., and has a large recess measuring 1.60 × 1.55 m. in its western wall. The western wall of this recess is formed by a large slab of white limestone, framed by two narrow slabs of the same material. Most probably the large slab was intended to have been inscribed, although no trace of any inscription can be detected. On the other hand, it may have been merely painted, as is the case with the chapel walls.

(1) Or Subordinate of the King, or Liegeman, (J.E.A., Vol. XVIII, p. 56).
(2) Iwn-knm.wt, a priestly title. See W.s., I, p. 55; and Pinax, "Historie des Institutions et du Droit-Privé dans Anciennes Egypte", p. 152. See also Mastaba of Nr-t-k (4th Season), Vol. IV, p. 151.
In the southern wall of the fore-court is a doorway measuring \(0.70 \times 0.90\) m., giving access to a hall \((4.80 \times 3.25\) m.), the roof of which was upheld by two rectangular pillars of white limestone \((0.65 \times 0.65\) m.).

At the north-west corner of this hall is a short passage, 2.55 m. in length, leading to the entrance of the chapel.

The Chapel

It lies at the extreme west of the tomb, and measures \(5.75 \times 1.65\) m.

The Entrance

The doorway measures \(0.70 \times 0.82\) m., and opens east. The scenes and inscriptions upon its thicknesses were merely painted in brilliant colours upon a background of dark gray.

On the right and left edges of the thickness were borders composed of coloured lines and rectangles; only the colours of the lower part of these borders remain, and are arranged thus:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Blue</th>
<th>→</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Black</td>
<td>→</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White</td>
<td>→</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Black</td>
<td>→</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dark Red→</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The Left Thickness (Pl. LXXXVI, C)

All that remains of the scene on this thickness are the legs of the deceased, the left foot and arm of the son, and parts of the title "Director of the Wsḫ.t-hall".
The North Wall (Fig. 201)

The scenes painted on this wall have nearly all weathered away, a few traces of two registers, however, may still be seen. On the upper register are the middle parts of the figures of three men; while at the left side of the second register are parts of the figures of two men, and a few disconnected hieroglyphs. At the right side of the register are six large vases decorated with wide bands around their shoulders. They are painted light blue. In the middle of the register are a few traces of the legs of two men.

This scene is framed in two coloured borders, similar to those upon the door thicknesses. They extend down the right and left sides; moreover, the left side possesses a second border, the units of which are composed of small circles placed in groups of two above a small rectangle. Almost at the bottom of the wall, this pattern is changed to chevrons.

The West Wall

Two false-doors of local limestone are fixed in the western wall of this chapel.

The Northern False-Door (Pl. LXXXVII)

It measures 0.90 m. wide, and its present height is 1.65 m., although the upper part is badly damaged. On the right outer jamb is an incised, vertical row of hieroglyphs, reading: "... the Honoured One ... the Judge and Nome Administrator, He Who is in Front of the Throne, Sêm-nfr ".

At the bottom is a representation of the deceased in a walking attitude. He wears a long wig, a false beard, a wide necklace, and a short kilt with a triangular apron. This figure is repeated at the bottom of all four jambs.

The left outer jamb bears the inscription: "... the Honoured One ... the Judge, and Nome Administrator, Sêm-nfr ".

The inscription on the right inner jamb reads: "The Royal Director, the Iwn-knm.wt, the Judge, and Nome Administrator, He Who is in Front of the Throne, Sêm-nfr ".

The Southern False-Door (Fig. 202, Pl. LXXXVIII)

It measures 1'15 m. wide, and 1'65 m. high, but is damaged in its upper parts. The lower lintel bears two horizontal rows of hieroglyphs; the left side of the upper row being entirely effaced. The remainder reads:

(1) "The Royal Director, the Staff (of the People ...)."

(2) "The Judge, and Nome Administrator, He Who is in Front of the Throne, Sshm-nfr."

At the end was a figure of the deceased in a walking attitude; only the legs, the hem of the kilt, and the end of a long staff, now remain.

The right outer jamb is mostly weathered away, and only a few signs remain. These read: "... Opening Day of the ... Thoth ... Nome Administrator, Sshm-nfr."

The left outer jamb is also very much eroded. A few signs can be distinguished which read: "... that offerings may come forth ... at the Opening Day of the Year ... [the Feast of] Thoth, the First of the Year Feast, at every Feast ... .".

The right inner jamb is in a somewhat better state of preservation, and bears a vertical row of hieroglyphs; reading: "The Royal Director, the Staff of the People, the Iwn-knm.tet, the Priest of the Goddess Ma'at, Sshm-nfr".

The left inner jamb also bears a vertical row of hieroglyphs reading the same as those on the right one.

In front of this false-door is the opening of Shaft No. 1363, in which was found a slab of limestone, apparently a door-jamb. It bears a vertical row of well-cut hieroglyphs, reading: "A boon, which the King gives, and a boon which Anubis, Presiding Over ... gives, ... ."
Apparently the space lying to the right of the northern false-door was also occupied by painted scenes similar to those on the northern wall. All that remains are traces of the figures of two men engaged in dismembering an ox, and also the lower part of the right-hand coloured border which framed the scene (Fig. 203).

Shafts

Shaft No. 1296 (Fig. 204)

Grave-pit: 1.55 x 1.35 x 3.73 m. deep; partly built of rubble, partly rock-cut; irregular side-chamber opening east and 0.27 m. lower than the bottom of the shaft; rectangular recess cut in the floor of the chamber, lid of local limestone; a break in the southwest corner of the chamber opens into the chamber of Shaft No. 1297.

Shaft No. 1297 (Fig. 205)

Grave-pit: 1.75 x 1.87 x 7.88 m. deep. At a depth of 4.10 m., is an aperture, roughly cut, leading into Shaft No. 1363; just opposite, on the western side, is an irregular cutting, measuring 1.50 x 1.10 m. At a depth of 7.88 m. an aperture cut in the rock leads to a chamber containing a limestone sarcophagus, the lid of which was found displaced. Along the western wall of the chamber is a shelf 0.25 m. in height, cut in the rock.

SITUATION

This mastaba is situated to the south of that of I^r^j^t-n^sh^t.t (see General Plan 9-Q).

DESCRIPTION

The walls of this mastaba, which are built of small blocks of local limestone, are mostly ruined.

The entrance, which is 1.00 m. wide, opens north and communicates with a rectangular chapel, measuring 1.00 x 3.80 m. The eastern wall of this chapel is formed by the western wall of the ruined mastaba lying to its east. Along the base of the western wall is a stone bench 0.60 m. high and extending from the southern false-door to the end of the chapel.

The False-Door (Fig. 207, Pl. LXXXIX, A)

In the southern end of the western wall is a false-door of white limestone, and at a distance of about 1.25 m. to the north of it is a gap in the masonry which must mark the site of another false-door which has now entirely disappeared.

The southern false-door measures 0.77 m. wide. Its upper part is destroyed, but the remainder consists of a monolithic slab of white limestone 1.20 m. high.

Each jamb is inscribed with two vertical rows of incised hieroglyphs, those on the right outer jamb reading:

(1) "... upon which the Honoured Ones used to walk, in peace, in peace."

(2) "... Feast, in the Feast of Thoth, in every feast, and in every day, for the length of eternity."

At the bottom of the jamb is the figure of the deceased represented in a walking attitude. He faces inwards towards the door, and carries a long staff in his right hand, and a hrp-baton in his left hand.

The left outer jamb bears the following inscription:

(1) • • • • • • that he may be buried in the Necropolis of the western desert."

(2) "... [the Honoured One by] the King, and by Anubis, Who is Upon His Mountain, [and by] Osiris Presiding Over Ddw, Kir."

At the bottom of the inscription is a figure of the deceased, similar to the one upon the right outer jamb.

The right inner jamb is inscribed:

(1) "The Overseer of the Scribes the Judge, and Inspector of the Book-keepers, Secretary of the Secrets of the Commissions of the Service of the Divine Offerings."

(2) "[The Honoured] by Anubis, Lord of the Necropolis, and by Osiris, the Lord of Abydos."

At the bottom of the jamb is a figure of the deceased represented in a walking attitude with both arms hanging at his sides; above his head is inscribed his name: "Kir".

The inscription on the left inner jamb is identical in every respect to that upon the right one, and bears a similar representation of the deceased.

In front of this false-door is an offering-table of white limestone; it measures 1.00 x 0.75 m. and bears a "hrp" sign = carved in relief upon its upper surface. It is in a good state of preservation.

1. \( \left( \right) \) \( rh \ njswt \) "King's Relative".

2. \( \left( \right) \) \( nb \ imth \) "The Possessor of Honour".

SITUATION

This mastaba is situated to the south of that of \( Hm.w \), and on the west of that of \( 'nh-m \ st.f \) (see General Plan 8-O).

DESCRIPTION

The lower part of this tomb is cut in the native rock, and if ever there was a superstructure it has long since disappeared.

The entrance to the chapel measures 1.32 m. wide, and is cut in the eastern end of the northern side of the rock-hewn passage leading to the Tomb of \( Hm.t-R' \). It was found blocked by a later burial pit built of local limestone, one block of which was found incised with two rows of hieroglyphs, reading :

(1) "A boon which the King gives, and a boon which Anubis, Presiding Over the God's Dwelling [gives] that he may be buried in . . .

(2) "the western desert after a very good old age, [to] the Honoured by the Great God, Iwf."

The filling of this pit was composed of limestone debris, and at the bottom was a side-chamber directed south, the aperture being closed with a single slab of limestone. The body contained in this chamber lay upon its left side with the head to the north, and facing east.

This pit was demolished in order to gain access to the chapel of the mastaba.

The Chapel

This chapel measures 1.32 \( \times \) 3.60 m.

The western wall bears indications of having been coated with a layer of plaster, and at its southern end is a recess.

The False-Door (Fig. 212)

Near the northern end of this wall is a false-door measuring 0.45 m. wide. The upper lintel bears a horizontal row of incised hieroglyphs, reading: "... God’s Dwelling, a burial in the Necropolis after a very good old age...".

The remainder of the false-door is uninscribed.

The Offering-Table (Pl. LXXXIX, B)

In front of the false-door was found an offering-table of limestone, still in its original place. It is made in the form of the “Htp” sign, and incorporates two libation tanks in its design.

On the right-hand outer edge is incised a vertical row of hieroglyphs, reading: "The King’s Relative, Ttj”.

The same inscription appears upon the left-hand outer edge.

Below the tanks is inscribed horizontally: "That offerings of bread [and beer] may come forth to him... Feast of Thoth, the Yearly Feast (?). the Feast of the Coming Forth of Min, every feast and every day”.

On the part representing the bread-loaf is inscribed: "The King’s Relative, the Possessor of Honour, Ttj”.

And below this are inscribed the names of various offerings: "a thousand loaves of bread"; "a thousand jars of beer"; "a thousand garments and alabaster..."
Against the eastern wall of the chapel were two later pits, built of local limestone, and having side-chambers directed east.

THE FAMILY TOMB of \( \text{IIFJ} \)

There are altogether four persons mentioned in this tomb, and although their relationship to each other is not expressly stated, we may infer that the head of the family is the man named \( S\text{sm-nfr} \) who is depicted on the jambs of the entrance. \( Ikrj \) and \( Ijf \) may be the two sons of the deceased, and the lady \( Nfr.t \) is perhaps the sister of these men. That she was not the wife of anyone of them may be gathered from her title \( \text{Nfr.t} \), which, though literally translated means the "King's Ornament" (Court Lady) and was held by both men and women, yet in the case of women was understood to mean also "King's Concubine". Only in rare instances do we find a lady who holds this title, also holding the title of "wife", and though there may be mention made in their tombs of parents, brothers, children, or sisters, there is very seldom the mention of a husband.

The following are the names and titles of the persons mentioned in this tomb:

(a) \( S\text{sm-nfr} \):
Title: \( \text{Sm-jmj n j}\) "Scribe of the King's Documents in His (i.e. the King's) Presence".

(b) \( Ifj \):
Title: \( \text{imtwh-kr-nfr} \) "Honoured by the Great God".

(c) \( Ikrj \):
Titles:
1. \( \text{imtwh} \) "The Honoured".
2. \( \text{imtwh} \) "Honoured by Osiris the Lord of Ddw (Busiris)".
3. \( \text{imtwh} \) "Honoured by Ptah-Skr in love".

Passage to Mastaba of Queen Rekhit Ra

SITUATION

This mastaba, which is entirely rock-hewn, is situated in the eastern wall of the passage leading to the Tomb of Queen Rḫt-R’, at a distance of about 9'90 m. from its western end (see General Plan 7-Q).

DESCRIPTION

The Entrance

The entrance opens southwards, and measures 0'62 x 0'52 m. The lintel is almost entirely defaced, only the signs remaining to show that it was once inscribed.

The Drum (Fig. 215) (Pl. XC, A)

It bears a horizontal row of incised hieroglyphs, reading: "A boon which the King gives, [and a boon which Osiris], Presiding Over Ddw (gives) that offerings of [beer] and bread may come forth [to] the Honoured One (1) . . . ."

The Right Thickness (Fig. 216, Pl. XC, C)

On the right thickness Ḥrj is represented as standing before Sṯm-nfr, who is drawn on a slightly larger scale. Ḥrj wears a short kilt, and a short wig, but the middle part of his body and his arms are lacking. His facing Sṯm-nfr also wears a short wig, and a long, curiously patterned kilt. His arms hang at his sides with the hands empty.

The space above the heads of these two figures was occupied by four vertical rows of hieroglyphs, most of which are obliterated; the remaining signs read: (1) "... of his lord"; (2) ; (3) ; (4) ;

Below the figure of Sṯm-nfr is a small figure of a male offering bearer.

(1) It is most unusual to find the offering formula inscribed upon the drum of the entrance.
The Left Thickness (Fig. 217, Pl. XC, B)

On the left thickness is a similar scene in which Ikrj is shown burning incense in front of Sım-nfr. From this scene we may infer that Sım-nfr is the head of the family, and it is equally possible that he is the owner of the tomb of a man bearing that name which lies just to the west.

Ikrj wears a short kilt with a triangular apron, the kilt is decorated with horizontal stripes, while the apron bears a design of rectangles.

Upon his head is a short wig, (or perhaps the natural hair?) and his chin is adorned with a false beard. Upon his wrists are wide bracelets. Sım-nfr wears a short wig, and a long kilt bearing the same curious pattern as that of Ikrj. He also wears bracelets upon his wrists and his feet are shod with sandals.
Below the figure of Ssm-nfr is a small representation of a man carrying a basket of bread upon his shoulder. In front of him is a vertical row of hieroglyphs, reading: "The Director of the Hall of Food" Nfr.j.

Above the heads of Ssm-nfr and Ikrj are the remains of five vertical rows of hieroglyphs, reading:

1.  "... of his Lord, Ssm-nfr".
2.  "... the Unique (1)".
3.  "... place of the heart of His Lord".
4.  "... praises him".
5.  "(Honoured) by the Great God".
6.  "Ikrj".

The Chapel

This entrance gives immediate access to a small rectangular chapel measuring 3.80 X 1.25 m. It was found partly filled with limestone debris, on the upper surface of which were six skeletons extended on their backs, with the heads to the north. Traces of a layer of mud were observed upon the bones.

In the western wall of this chapel are cut four false-doors, one of which is unfinished.

The False-Door of Nfr.t (Fig. 218, Pl. XCI, B)

It is situated at a distance of 0.45 m. from the entrance, and measures 0.45 X 1.05 m. On the panel is a representation of the deceased seated upon a bovine-legged chair. Her right hand is stretched out to an offering-table placed before her, and her left hand holds a lotus-flower which she is smelling. To the right of the table are two superposed registers depicting various articles of food and drink offerings. Above the table is incised: "Thousands of loaves of bread, thousands of jars of beer, thousands of geese, thousands of oxen, (for the) Court Lady".

The right jamb bears a vertical row of incised hieroglyphs, reading: "The Court Lady, the Honoured One, Nfr.t. Her 'Good Name', Sinj".
Below this inscription, the deceased is represented in a standing attitude, and wearing a long, tight robe. In her right hand she holds a long-stemmed lotus-flower, which she is smelling; her left arm hangs at her side, the hand grasping another bloom.

The left outer jamb is mostly effaced, all that remains of its inscriptions being the title "The Honoured One", and part of the right arm and shoulder of the deceased.

At the bottom of this false-door is a raised platform 0.40 m. high, hewn out of the natural rock; it probably served as offering-table.

To the north of the false-door of Nfr.t is the unfinished false-door. It was abandoned soon after it was commenced, only a cavetto cornice and a torus moulding having been cut.

The False-Door of Ikry (Fig. 219, Pl. XCI. A)

It lies to the north of the unfinished false-door, and measures 0.47×1.05 m. Its upper lintel bears a horizontal row of incised hieroglyphs, reading: "A boon, which the King gives, and a boon, which Anubis, Who is Upon His Mountain (gives), that offerings of bread and beer may come forth to the Honoured One, Ikry".

On the panel is a representation of the deceased seated before an offering-table, to which he stretches forth his right hand. Above the table is inscribed: "Thousands of loaves of bread, thousands of jars of beer, thousands of oxen, thousands of alabaster, thousands of clothing, and all kinds of fowls, to the Honoured One, Ikry".

On the left outer jamb a vertical row of hieroglyphs, reads: "The Judge and Book-keeper, the Honoured by Osiris, Lord of Ddu, Ikry".

The right outer jamb bears a vertical row of incised hieroglyphs, reading: "The Judge and Book-keeper, the Honoured by Ptah-Seker . . . Ikry".

The lower lintel bears a horizontal row of hieroglyphs, reading: "The Honoured One . . . Ikry".

The False-Door of Ifj (Fig. 220, Pl. XCV)

In the northern corner of the western wall is the false-door of Ifj, which measures $0.85 \times 1.10$ m. The upper lintel bears a horizontal row of hieroglyphs, reading: "A boon which the King [gives, and a boon which] Anubis, Who is Upon His Mountain Imj-wt, the Lord of the Sacred Land, [gives], that offerings of bread, cake, and beer come forth to . . . ."

On the panel is a representation of the deceased seated before an offering-table. To the right of this table is a ewer and a basin, and a low stand piled high with food-offerings. Parallel with the top of the panel is a horizontal row of hieroglyphs, reading: "A thousand loaves of bread, a thousand jars of beer, a thousand oxen, to the Honoured, Ifj".

The right-hand side of the horizontal inscription on the lower lintel is effaced. The remainder reads: "The Honoured by the Great God, Ifj".

The right outer jamb is almost entirely effaced, all that can be recognized of its inscription being part of the title "The Honoured" and the initial sign of Ifj's name. At the bottom of this jamb are a very faint traces of a figure of a man in a walking attitude.

The left outer jamb is somewhat better preserved and retains the greater part of a vertical row of hieroglyphs, reading: "... the Scribe of the King's Documents in His Presence, Sḥm-nfr".

At the bottom is a figure of a man, staff in hand, facing inwards to the centre of the door. He is represented in a walking attitude, and wears a short kilt.

The right inner jamb is totally defaced, and all that remains of the inscription on the left inner jamb is the sign, Nfr.

In front of these last two false-doors is a rock-cut platform measuring $0.55 \times 1.65$ m., the northern end of which bears a loaf of bread carved in relief. This fact proves that the platform was intended to serve as an offering-table.

Burial: A few bones scattered in disorder.

Shaft No. 1393 (Fig. 222)

Grave-pit: 100 × 100 × 5·75 m. deep; sloping at bottom to an irregular burial-chamber opening east; a break in the south-east corner opens into Shaft No. 1394.

Shaft No. 1394 (Fig. 223)

Grave-pit: 100 × 1-25 × 5-85 m. deep; the west wall of pit descending in two stages; side-chamber opening west.
MASTABA No. 26

SITUATION

This mastaba, which is of the corridor type, is situated to the east of that of Imim-Nt (1) (see General Plan 10-P).

DESCRIPTION

The mastaba is entirely built of medium-sized blocks of local limestone, the upper courses of which are lacking. The doorway, now wholly destroyed, opens eastwards, and gives access to a narrow corridor measuring 1'0 x 0'50 m., which, in turn, leads to a small, rectangular chapel (1'47 x 0'97 m.).

Two later burials, in a very bad state of preservation, were found to have been constructed in the chapel. There appears to have been a false-door in the western wall of the chapel, but it was apparently removed in ancient times, and replaced by a few blocks of local stone, this being perhaps the work of the later intruders.

Immediately to the south of the place of the false-door is a serdab, the upper courses of which are entirely destroyed. This had also been used in later times as a burial-place, as can be proved by the presence of a skeleton, damaged by the collapse of the roof. Near the western wall of the serdab, and placed with their faces directed to the east, were two limestone statuettes (Pl. III, 2). They were found buried beneath the debris and fallen roofing slabs.

Statuette No. 1 (Pl. XCIII, A, B, C)

Material.—White limestone, painted.

Dimensions.—Height : 34'0 cm. Breadth across shoulders : 12'5 cm.

Preservation.—Very good.

Workmanship.—Fair. The general effect is somewhat clumsy, but care has been given to some anatomical details, and especially to the head, which is clearly intended to be a portrait.

Subject.—It represents a man seated upon a stool; his forearms rest upon his thighs, the right hand being closed upon the unknown object, while the left one is extended palm downwards upon his knee.

Fawzy Ibrahim

Fig. 224
He appears to be wearing his natural hair, and is clad in a short, white kilt. The eyes are wide open, the eyebrows being slightly arched; the cheek-bones are high and somewhat prominent.

Colouring.—Hair, eyes, eyebrows, and stool, black; flesh, dark reddish brown; kilt, white.

Statuette No. 2 (Pl. XCIV, A, B, C)

Material.—White limestone, painted.

Dimensions.—Height: 27·0 cm. Breadth across shoulders: 11·5 cm.

Preservation.—Good.

Workmanship.—Fair. The face is unnaturally small, but is perhaps an exaggeration of a characteristic feature in the appearance of the sitter.

The features suggest that the man represented was not of pure Egyptian blood.

Subject.—It represents a man in precisely the same attitude as the preceding statuette. He wears a short, curled wig, a wide necklace, and a short kilt. The upper part of the face resembles that of the first statuette, but the chin is smaller and less prominent.

Colouring.—Wig, eyes, and eyebrows, black; flesh, reddish brown; kilt, white.

Shaft No. 1142 (Fig. 225)

Grave-pit: 1·0 × 1·0 × 7·67 m., partly built of rubble and partly rock-hewn; filling of limestone debris; side-chamber on the west, aperture closed with three slabs of limestone; nothing found.
Shaft No. 1143 (Fig. 226)

Grave-pit: 1.5 × 1.5 × 3.50 m, partly built of rubble and partly cut in the rock; filling of limestone debris; side-chamber on the west; aperture closed with three slabs of limestone; nothing found.

Shaft No. 1144 (Fig. 227)

Grave-pit: 0.95 × 0.95 × 3.70 m, partly built of rubble and partly rock-hewn; filling of limestone debris; side-chamber on the west 0.38 m higher than the bottom of the pit; aperture closed with two slabs of limestone; nothing found.
MASTABA No. 27

SITUATION

This mastaba lies to the north-west of that of Krij-hr-st.f, and on the south-west of that of Irj-n-jh.t (see General Plan 9-P,Q).

DESCRIPTION

The mastaba is almost entirely constructed of local limestone masonry, the upper courses of which are lacking.

The Entrance

The entrance opens east. It measures 0.67 X 1.87 m. deep, and has a pronounced batter. The outer jambs are composed of large slabs of fine quality Turah limestone, and measure 1.15 X 0.40 wide. Both the jambs and thicknesses bear beautifully executed reliefs, and although they are sadly mutilated, enough remains to testify to the excellence of their workmanship.

The Right Jamb (Fig. 228, Pl. XCV, B)

It bears a large representation of a man, presumably the owner of the tomb. He is represented in a walking attitude, but leans upon a long staff, the handle of which is placed under his right arm after the fashion of a crutch.

He wears a short wig finely dressed with rows of small curls; around his neck is a wide necklace composed of six rows of beadwork held in place with (metal?) spacers. His body is clad in a short kilt with a pleated side-wrap (worn back to front), over which is thrown the sacerdotal leopard skin, fastened on the right shoulder with a knot of ribbons (2).

(2) The unnatural appearance of the skin suggests that even at this early date the garment had become conventionalized and a fabric skin took the place of the original natural pelt.
Mastaba No. 27

The Left Jamb (Fig. 230, Pl. XCV, A)

On the left jamb the deceased is shown in a walking attitude, with his arms hanging by his side.

He wears a long, plaited wig, a short kilt with a pleated wrap, (also worn back to front), and a broad stole crossing his body, passing over the left shoulder and under the right arm-pit, this being the badge of the hrj-hb or Ritualist.

The Right Thickness (Fig. 231, Pl. XCVI, A)

The deceased is represented in a walking attitude, facing east, and is also shown leaning upon his long staff (1). The head is lacking. He wears a short kilt with a pleated side wrap (2) and his feet are shod with sandals.

Behind him stands the figure of a woman, with her left hand placed open upon her breast, and her right arm hanging by her side. She wears a long wig, and a long, tight robe.

Above her head are the lower ends of two vertical rows of hieroglyphs, reading: 1. "... the King's Daughter"; 2. "... Nj-Mj [?]".

This thickness is in a very bad state of preservation; only the upper part of the left arm, and the legs remain of the large figure of the deceased.

The lower part of the long staff also remains, and is held by the right hand of a small figure of a naked child. This child, who is presumably the son of the deceased, holds a lotus-flower in his left hand.

---

(1) Are we to infer from this that the owner of this mastaba was slightly crippled? If so, the scenes, representing him leaning on his staff, were made in order that the Ka might recognize the portrait, while the representations in which there is no staff were made in order that the Ka might inhabit a body free from any infirmity.

(2) Again worn back to front.

The Chapel

This entrance gives access to a rectangular chapel measuring $3.80 \times 1.40$ m. The northern and eastern walls are built of small-sized blocks of local limestone.

The West Wall

It is wholly composed of two huge slabs of white Turah limestone measuring $1.45 \times 0.45 \times 1.55$ m. and $1.35 \times 0.45 \times 1.60$ m. respectively. At both the northern and southern ends of this wall is cut a false door measuring $0.70$ m. wide. They were apparently uninscribed, but only the lower parts remain.
The remaining part of the south wall is composed of a large slab of white Turah limestone measuring about 1.35 m. wide and 1.35 m. high.

MASTABA No. 28

SITUATION

This mastaba is situated on the south of that of In-ka-f, the Priest, and on the south-east of that of Queen Rhi-t-R' (see General Plan 8-P).

DESCRIPTION

The walls, which are built of small blocks of local limestone, are in a very ruinous state, the eastern wall being wholly destroyed, save for the base, which is cut from the native rock.

A false door was found lying upon the ground in front of the mastaba. It is formed of a single block of local limestone, but is uninscribed. In the debris lying beneath it were found two model vases of alabaster.

SHAFTS

Shaft No. 1409 (Fig. 233)

Grave-pit: 1'00 × 1'05 × 1'00 m. deep; side-chamber on the south, roofed with three slabs of limestone; aperture opened.

Shaft No. 1410 (Fig. 234)

Grave-pit: 1'00 × 1'00 × 3'15 m. deep; burial-chamber on west.

Contents: A rectangular coffin of finely polished cedar (?) wood. It measures 1'78 × 0'74 × 0'70 m., and has a vaulted lid, the boards of which are held in position by means of curved wooden supports fixed to the under side; these had, however, become detached and had fallen into the coffin. The planks forming the sides are fixed to the corner uprights by means of wooden dowels reinforced with plaster. The vaulted planks of the lid are bedded into square blocks of wood at the southern and northern ends. The lid was found untampered with.
Burial: An undisturbed skeleton lying on the left side, with the head north, and legs slightly bent at the knees.

Shaft No. 1411 (Fig. 236)

Grave-pit: 1·00 × 1·05 × 3·10 m. deep; side-chamber on the west; aperture opened.

Burial: Damaged bones, scattered in disorder.

MISCELLANEOUS OBJECTS FOUND DURING THE COURSE OF EXCAVATION

STATUARY

1.—Statuette of a Woman (Pls. XCVII, A, B, C, XCVIII, A)

Material. —White limestone, painted.

Dimensions. —Height: 32.0 cm., pedestal: 15.0 × 8.0 cm.

Description.—The statuette represents a woman standing with her feet close together and her arms at her sides. Her hair is cut short like a man's and she is clad in a long, tight-fitting robe reaching to the ankles. The woman seems to be a dwarf. The head is large, the nose short, the lips thick and protruding. The ears are large, and the thick neck is out of all proportion to the narrow shoulders. The bust is well-developed and the body not unsightly, but the arms are disproportionately long for the short, stumpy legs and clumsy feet. But these glaring faults seem to be more due to the unfortunate appearance of the original, than to lack of skill on the part of the sculptor, for the figure displays fine workmanship, and one feels that the sculptor has done what he could to make the best of a bad job and at the same time preserve a faithful likeness to the original. A plinth supports the figure from the back. The hair is painted black, and traces of black are to be seen on the eyes and eyebrows, and traces of yellow on the flesh.

Inscriptions. —On the plinth is a vertical inscription, reading: 'The King's Relative, Priestess of Ht-Hr, Mistress of the Sycamore, Mr.s.'nh'. This inscription displays some peculiarities; it commences in the middle of the plinth instead of at the top, and the first sign is large and carved in relief, while the remainder of the signs (except ) are considerably smaller and are incised. is again large, but incised and without detail to the loop. On the pedestal in front of the feet is inscribed: 'The King's Relative Priestess of Ht-Hr, Mr.s.'nh'.

Found in the debris lying to the south of Mastaba F.

2.—Head of a Limestone Statuette (Pl. XCVIII, B)

Material. —White limestone, painted.

Description. —The head and part of the shoulders of a limestone statuette of a man. He wears a long wig brushed back to reveal the lobes of the ears and a wide necklace. The face is rounded, with large features and is clearly a portrait. The flesh is coloured red, the hair, eyes and eyebrows were black, and traces of blue and black remain upon the necklace.

Found in the filling of Shaft No. 3099.
3.—A Damaged Statuette of a Bakeress (Pl. XCIX, A)

Material.—White limestone.

Description.—All that remains of this statuette is the much-damaged trunk and legs and the feet of a woman engaged in baking bread. She was seated upon the ground with her legs drawn up in front of her in a similar pose to the statuette of the bakeress in the Mastaba of Nj-k1.w-Ḥr-Ḥr (see Pl. LXXVIII). In front of her is the lower part of a pile of moulds containing bread which are supposed to be baking upon a hearth. Judging by the foot of the statuette, the workmanship seems to have been fairly good.

Found in the debris to the east of the false-door of Kf-fj'-nh.

4.—An Unfinished Statuette (Pl. XCIX, B)

Material.—Limestone.

Description.—A statuette of a man, in the preliminary stage of execution. The intention was to represent him seated, but even at this early stage one can see that the figure is out of proportion, the arms and body being much too long for the legs. Perhaps it was abandoned for this reason.

Found in the debris to the east of the Mastaba of 'nh-hi-f.

5.—The Head of a Statuette of a Woman

Material.—Limestone (white).

Description.—The head of a limestone statuette of a woman. She wears a short wig over her natural hair. Very fine work.

Found in the debris lying to the west of the southern end of the subway running under the causeway of the Second Pyramid.

6.—A Damaged Statue of King H'jff Kh (Khafra')

Material.—Diorite.

Description.—The lower part of a fine diorite statue of Khafra'. The body from the waist upwards, and the front of the pedestal and the feet are lacking. The King was represented seated upon his throne, the sides of which bear the symbolical design of the union of Upper and Lower Egypt. He is clad in the royal ḫ2fl t kilt. On the front of the throne is inscribed:

\[\text{The Good God, Ḥr-wsr-ḥb (Khafra')}\]

7.—Many Fragments of Statues of Diorite and Alabaster

During the clearance of the site surrounding the Mortuary Temple of Khafra' we found thousands of fragments of splendid royal statues of diorite and alabaster. Undoubtedly these were all statues of King Khafra'.
Świbtj-Figures:—

(1) A finely-made świbtj figure of glazed faience. The face is well modelled. The left hand held the rope handle of a basket, slung over the left shoulder, and the right hand holds the hoe. The front of the body is uninscribed, but on the plinth running up the back is a vertical inscription, reading: “The Inspector of the Physicians of the King’s Wife . . .”. Height: 147 cm. (Pl. XCIIX, C). Found in the sand to the east of the Mastaba of Ssn-nfr.

(2) A świbtj-figure of glazed faience. The figure is male, and wears a plaited Osirian beard and a long plaited wig. He grasps a hoe in each hand and has also the basket slung over the left shoulder. The plinth up the back is uninscribed but the front of the body bears nine horizontal rows of hieroglyphs giving a version of Ch. VI of the Book of the Dead (Pl. C, A, B). Found in the sand to the south of the Mastaba of Rhi-t-R’.

(3) Eight świbtj-figures of glazed faience, crudely modelled. They wear long wigs, plaited Osirian beards, and carry a hoe in the right hand and the handle of the basket which is slung over the shoulder, in the left one. Down the front of each figure is a vertical inscription, reading: (Pls. C, C-D; 01, A). Found in the debris to the north of the Mastaba of Shm-I3J.

(4) Two świbtj-figures of glazed faience. They have the usual wig and beard, and carry a hoe in each hand. On the front of the figures are some roughly incised hieroglyphs giving the name and parentage of the owner (Pl. Cl, C). Found in the debris to the north of the Mastaba of Iwn-R’.

(5) A wooden świbtj-figure, the feet of which are lacking. Found in the sand to the west of the Great Sphinx.

Amulets and Beads

(1) An amuletic statuette of the Goddess Isis in glazed faience. She is represented standing with the left foot advanced and the arms hanging at the sides. She wears a long wig, a long close-fitting garment, and is crowned with her name-symbol. Found in a sarcophagus in Shaft No. 2015 (Pl. CI, D).

(2) A Dd-emblem of blue glazed faience, neatly made. Found with the preceding amulet (Pl. CI, E).

(3) Small disk-shaped beads of light and dark bluish-green faience. Found near the neck of a skeleton in a sarcophagus in Shaft No. 2015 (Pl. CI, B).
(4) An amulet of glazed faience in the form of the Sacred Eye of Horus. It represents the right eye, and is very neatly made. Found with a burial in Shaft No. 2029 (Pl. CII, A).

(5) An amulet figure of the uraeus serpent, in glazed faience. The hood is erect and the tail looped. Found with the preceding object (Pl. CII, B).

(6) An amulet consisting of two conjoined fingers. Carved from obsidian. Found with the two preceding objects (Pl. CII, C).

(7) A barrel-shaped bead of carnelian. Found with the three preceding objects (Pl. CII, D).

(8) A model headrest of hemsetite. These amulets were made to conform to Ch. CLXVI of the Book of the Dead which was designed to prevent the head of the corpse from being carried away. Found in the sand lying to the north of the Mastaba of Prince Iwn-R' (Pl. CII, E).

(9) A large uninscribed scarab of dark stone. Found in the debris lying on top of the Mastaba of Iwn-R'.

STONE VESSELS

(1) A fine canopic jar of highly-polished alabaster. The lid is in the form of Kbk-smw.f, the hawk-headed Son of Horus. The jar still retains its original contents, which can be seen as a dark mass through the semi-transparent sides of the jar. Height: 25-0 cm. Found in the surface sand to the north-east of the Mastaba of Queen Rhj-t-R (Pl. CII, F).

(2) A small model cup of white limestone. Found in the debris lying to the west of the Mastaba of Rmn-w-kt (Pl. CII, G).

(3) A model oil or ointment jar of white limestone. Found with the preceding objects (Pl. CII, H).

(4) A bowl of white limestone, with thick sides and a round base. Found in the debris to the west of the Mastaba of Rmn-w-kt (Pl. CIII, B).

(5) An alabaster jar for oil or ointment. Found in the sand to the north of the Mastaba of Iwn-R' (Pl. CIII, A).

(6) Three large jars of red ware, having short-collared necks, wide shoulders tapering slightly to a round base. Found with a number of other objects in the sand to the south of the Mastaba of Queen Rhj-t-R' (Pl. CIII, C).

(7) A bowl of red ware having straight sides tapering sharply to a narrow base. Found in the debris on the north-west of the Mastaba of Kš-dwt (Pl. CIII, D).

(8) A deep bowl of red ware, with a wide mouth, and a roll rim. The sides taper gradually to a flat base. Found in the sand to the south of the Mastaba of Queen Rḥḥjt-R' (Pl. CIII, E).

(9) Two pots of red ware. The first is of fine quality. It has an oval body with a round base, and a flaring mouth embellished by a roll rim and two bands in relief. The second pot is somewhat coarser. It has a long, flaring mouth with a roll rim, wide shoulders, and tapers to a narrow painted base. It is the type of vessel which the Egyptians called gs-jars (see Part II of this work, p. 29). Found in the debris near the eastern wall of the Mastaba of Prince Iw-n-R' (Pl. CIV, A).

(10) A large pot of red ware. It has a wide mouth, nearly straight sides tapering at the bottom to a small round base. When found, it was broken into five pieces, but has been repaired. Found in the debris to the north of the Mastaba of Prince Iw-n-R' (Pl. CIV, B).

(11) Two gs-jars of red ware. Found in the debris filling the Chapel of Prince Iw-n-R' (Pl. CIV, C).

(12) Two bowls with wide mouths, narrow roll rims and nearly straight sides tapering gradually to a flat base. Found in the sand to the south of the Mastaba of Queen Rḥḥjt-R' (Pl. CIV, D).

Two shallow dishes of red ware, found with the preceding vessels (Pl. CIV, E).

(13) A small bowl of coarse red ware, tapering to a narrow footed base. This type of pot was frequently used as a lid for larger vessels. Found with the preceding objects (Pl. CIV, F).

(14) A large jar of red ware, having a flat base, wide shoulders and a short, wide spout. Found in the soft sand filling the courtyard of Prince Iw-n-R' (Pl. CV, A).

(15) A small bowl with a round base, in fine quality red ware, perhaps a drinking-bowl. Found in the sand filling the chapel of Kij-swdj.w (Pl. CV, B).

(16) A large spouted jar, similar to No. 14, but smaller. Found with the above-mentioned bowl (Pl. CV, C).

(17) A large jar with a wide mouth and a roll rim, a short wide neck, wide shoulders and a swelling body with flat heavy base. It has two small lugs. Found in the sand north of the Mastaba of Iw-n-R' (Pl. CV, D).

(18) Four small shallow basins with narrow, flat bases (perhaps lids of larger jars). Found in the sand to the south of the Mastaba of Queen Rḥḥjt-R' (Pl. CV, E).

(19) Two large cylindrical jars of red ware. They have wide mouths, short, straight necks, three small lugs placed immediately below the shoulders, and small flat bases. Found with the preceding objects (Pl. CVI, A).

(20) A large cylindrical jar with two lugs and a pointed base. It has been painted white. Found with the preceding objects (Pl. CVI, B).

(21) Three large cylindrical jars of red ware. They have long, slightly flaring necks, and round bases. Found with the preceding objects (Pl. CVI, C).

(22) Two large cylindrical jars of red ware, with very wide mouths and round bases. Found with the preceding objects (Pl. CVII, A).
(23) A globular jar, with a short neck, roll rim and round base. Found with the preceding vessels (Pl. CVII, B).

(24) A large jar of a similar type to those described under No. 22, and found with them (Pl. CVII, C).

(25) A large, flat dish of roughly made red ware. Found in the debris near the Mastaba of Kr-Kaj'nh (Pl. CVIII, A).

(26) A fragment of a large flat dish or tray of red ware. It had small knob feet. Found with the preceding dish (Pl. CVIII, B).

(27) A wine jar of red ware. Found with the preceding objects. (For the identification of this type of vessel, see Part II of this work, p. 37) (Pl. CVIII, C.)

(28) A small cup of glazed faience, with a rimmed mouth and wide, flat base. Found in the soft sand to the south of the Mastaba of Queen Rhj.t-R' (Pl. CVIII, D).

(29) A drinking bowl of fine, hard red pottery. It has a re-curved rim and a round base. Found in the debris to the west of the Mastaba of Rmn.w-kt (Pl. CVIII, E).

(30) An oval jar with a narrow, short neck, wide shoulders and a round base. Found in the sand to the south of the Mastaba of Queen Rhj.t-R' (Pl. CVIII, F).

(31) Two large oval jars of red ware, similar to the preceding, but larger, and were found in the same place (Pl. CVIII, G, H).

(32) Nine jugs and vases of red ware, some having handles, and all with flat bases. Found in the debris lying to the north-west of the Mastaba of Ki-desi (Pl. CIX, A, B).

(33) Three jars of red ware similar to Nos. 21 and 24, and found with them (Pl. CIX, C).

(34) Two large deep bowls, with roll rimmed mouths and small, flat bases. Found with the preceding vessels (Pl. CX, A).

(35) Three large oval jars of fine quality red ware. They have short-collared necks and round bases. Found with the preceding objects (Pl. CX, B).

(36) Three large oval jars of red ware. They are similar to the preceding, but have longer necks, and were found in the same spot (Pl. CXI, A).

(37) Two shallow bowls with narrow bases. Found in sand to the south of the Mastaba of Queen Rhj.t-R' (Pl. CXI, B).

(38) A shallow bowl of coarse red ware. Found in the debris to the north-west of the Mastaba of Rmn.w-kt (Pl. CXI, C).

(39) A large jar of red ware. It has a wide mouth with an overhanging rim, a straight neck. The shoulders are narrow, but the body swells out widely near the bottom and terminates in a round base. The surface of the body is decorated with a series of circular ridges. Found above the mud-brick wall built by Thothmes IV at the spot near the Mastaba of Kr-m-nfr.t (Pl. CXI, D).
(40) Five small bowls of red ware, with plain rims and narrow, flat bases. Found in the sand to the south of the Mastaba of Queen Rḥt-R' (Pl. CXII, A).

(41) A small bowl of coarse red ware. Found in the filling of Shaft No. 3027 (Pl. CXII, B).

(42) An incense-burner (?) of coarse red ware. Found with the preceding object (Pl. CXII, C).

(43) A cylindrical jar with a short straight neck, slightly concave body and very small, flat base. Found with the preceding objects (Pl. CXII, D).

(44) A deep globular bowl of red ware, found with the preceding objects (Pl. CXII, E).

(45) A large bowl with a rimmed mouth, straight sides and a round base. Found in the sand to the north of the Mastaba of Prince Ḡn-R (Pl. CXII, F).

(46) A deep bowl with a roll rim and flat base. Found in the debris to the north-west of the Mastaba of Ṭmn.w-škt (Pl. CXII, G).

(47) A deep bowl, similar to the preceding but with a smaller, rounder base, and found in the same spot (Pl. CXIII, A).

(48) A large jar similar to No. 43. Found with the preceding objects (Pl. CXIII, B).

(49) Nine large jars, all with round bases and some having short necks. Found with the preceding objects (Pls. CXIII, C; CXIV, A, B; CXV, A).

(50) A large flat dish of red ware, finely made. Found beside the body in the burial-chamber of Shaft No. 2062 (Pl. CXV, B).

Miscellaneous Objects:

(1) Two moulds of limestone for making a figure of a fatted duck. Found in the sand to the south of the Mastaba of Queen Rḥt-R' (Pl. CXVI, A, B, E).

(2) A mould of limestone for making šwibji-figures. Found with the preceding moulds (Pl. CXVI, C, D).

(3) An uninscribed false-door of limestone. Found in the debris filling the passage leading to the Mastaba of Princess Hm.t-R' (Pl. CXVI, F).

(4) Two hammers of limestone (Pl. CXVII, A).

(5) A hammer of gray granite, 210 cm. in length. Found in the debris to the south of the Mastaba of Kjr (Pl. CXVII, B).

(6) A model sarcophagus of limestone, measuring 5·0 × 3·7 cm. Found in the serdab of the Mastaba of Queen Rḥt-R' (Pl. CXVII, C).

(7) A small lamp of the Roman Period, bearing a debased frog design and palm-leaves. Found in the sand to the north-west of the Mastaba of Kır-šmt (Pl. CXVII, D).

(8) A libation basin of white limestone, inscribed: \( \overline{\text{Possessor of Honour in the Presence of the God, Msj}} \). Found in the debris north of the passage leading to the Mastaba of Suf (Pl. CXVII, E).
A long-necked bottle of finely-made glass. Dark green in colour. It is in a perfect state of preservation. Found in the debris to the north-west of the Mastaba of Ki-dwi (Pl. CXVII. F).

A copper chisel. Found in the debris to the east of the entrance of the Mastaba of Ki-tswd3.

Five copper implements. Found near the right arm of a body in the burial-chamber of Shaft No. 4024. (For such copper implements, see Part II of this work, p. 42.)

The head of a gazelle in painted buff-coloured pottery. Found in the debris to the south of the Pyramid Temple of King Hüj.-R.'

Model vase of alabaster. Height: 60 cm.

The upper part of a false-door of white limestone bearing the following inscriptions:

The Upper Lintel: “A boon which the King gives, a [boon] which Anubis, who is Upon His Mountain [gives]. That offerings of all bread and beer may come forth at the voice to the Honoured One, Nb-sn (?)”.

The Panel.—The panel bears a representation of the deceased seated before an offering-table laden with half-loaves of bread. Above the scene is inscribed: “A boon which the King gives, a thousand loaves of bread, a thousand jars of beer, a thousand . . . !, a thousand . . . , a thousand . . . ? The Honoured One Nb-sn”.

The Outer Jamb

The Right Inner Jamb

The Lower Lintel

The lower lintel bears a horizontal inscription, reading: “The Honoured One, Nb-sn (?)”. Found in the sand filling the passage leading to the Mastaba of Princess Hm.t-R’.

(2) This name has hitherto occurred in an isolated example on a statue of Khafra' (Pyeke, "History of Egypt", Vol. I, p. 54) and Forchhammer thought it was an error for the well-known name (A.Z. XXXVI, p. 13). But its occurrence in this title proves that and are two separate names of Khafra', and in the original inscription of Kj-dw3 the two names follow each other.
